The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

"We go the distance for you."

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

Stories

They Were There. Some Survived. Some Did Not. Here Are Some East End Stories

By Amy Johns

Linda Gronlund

The names haunt us. Sag Harbor native Linda Gronlund and her fiancée were killed when flight 93, on its way from Newark to San Francisco, was hijacked and crashed at around 10 a.m. approximately 80 miles southeast of Pittsburgh. Linda, while on the plane, called her younger sister, Elsa Strong, at her home in Amherst, N.H. from her cell phone to tell her that they were being hijacked. The words she used to describe the experience are not known. Linda's mother, Doris Gronlund, well-known within the community as the former owner of Sagalund, a popular Sag Harbor shop, is devastated by her loss. A candlelight prayer vigil, held on Tuesday night, was attended by hundreds of family and friends from around the village. "She was a wonderful, wonderful lady," said Doris of her daughter.

> A young Asian woman ran by and popped a baby into my arms, yelling that she had to go into the building to look for her husband.

Others were more fortunate. Among the local residents who witnessed the terror firsthand and escaped from lower Manhattan with their lives are: Nelly Davoren of Orient Point, Billy Halsey of Westhampton, Betty Goldrich and Cara Galowitz of East Marion, Joseph Olidort, Jason Harbes of Mattituck, Ted Weissberg of Amagansett, Carey Maslow of Montauk and Aquin Medler of East Hampton.

Nelly Davoren and Billy Halsey

On that beautiful September morning, Nelly Davoren and Billy Halsey were manning the Terry Farm truck that annually brings produce from Orient to Farmers' Market Day held beside the twin towers of the World Trade Center. They were the last people in the market after the jets crashed and miraculously escaped the hail of steel and glass. A young Asian woman ran by and "popped a baby into my arms," yelling that she had to go into the building to look for her husband, said Ms. Davoren. The woman was only gone for five or ten minutes, but it "felt like an hour." A fireman told Ms.

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

It is still, and will be for a long time coming, the most constant thought in our minds. There isn't a minute that goes by that we don't remember what is going on in New York, Washington, D.C. and Pittsburgh. There isn't a minute that goes by that we as a nation and we as human beings don't openly grieve and mourn for each soul touched by this unspeakable act. It is with very heavy hearts that we continue to work and meet our deadlines in an effort to keep going. In working we can heal.

Please understand that our column here is meant to keep you informed on the entertainment level and at this time we are having difficulty keeping this format. Though we try to keep you informed on who's who out here and in New York, we feel a greater responsibility is to keep you informed on what you can do as members of this great nation to help your neighbors.

In speaking with Diane Amerosa, Director of the Red Cross Chapter in Yaphank, we have learned that there is an outpouring of people from the Suffolk County area who want to help. The feeling of helplessness is overwhelming. Ms. Amerosa has suggested the following advice. We have a Red Cross Chapter right here in Southampton. The office is located in the Town Hall of Southampton at 116 Hampton Road, Southampton.

At this location, they are accepting what is needed most right now and that is money. To make this even easier for you...get out your credit cards and call 1-800-HELPNOW. Contributions are desperately needed to keep the never-ending

Please help. Galluccio Estate Vineyards is pledging $10,000 to the New York Fire 9-11 Relief Fund. One hundred percent of this money will go directly to the families of the fallen heroes of New York's Fire and EMS units. THE SPIRIT OF OUR PEOPLE

Our thoughts and prayers are with those who have suffered profound loss in the terrorist attack in America last week. The people of East Hampton, with the instant leadership of the clergy and public officials, demonstrated the faith and mettle of all Americans by their participation in the rescue effort, their prayer vigil for the missing and the courage and resolve that strengthen our national government and its leaders.

There is a renewed sense of purpose that is palpable here and in New York City with which we wish to identify and for which we express our pride and optimism for the spirit of our people.

Sharing our grief,
Extending our hands

The management and staff of Gurney's Inn
offers our deepest sympathy to the families of those who were lost in the horrible terrorist attacks on our nation. Your loss is the loss of all of us at Gurney's, in all our diversity. We know that this tragedy was caused by hate, and we like to think of our small corner of this planet as a refuge from hate. We have people from all over the world working here in harmony, practicing many different religions, and respecting each other for our choice to live free in this freest of countries. We all join in condemning this product of intolerance and hate. We would also like to thank our courageous fellows in the Fire Service, EMS, Police, and civilian volunteers who have done such a wonderful job coping with this disaster. When we pray for the souls of the dead and the recovery of the injured, let us also offer a prayer of thanks for those that help.

God Bless America!

Davoren to run to the basement of the Brooks Brothers building where, she said, "We couldn't see and couldn't breathe. Whatever it was was burning our eyes. We were lost in the building. Then there were flashing lights. We followed some guys. They said, 'Go straight until you see water.'"

Spurred to action, Mr. Halsey went with a fireman to help others escape and was himself saved by a policeman who threw him under a stairwell for protection. After reuniting with Ms. Davoren at the waterfront, he was treated for smoke inhalation before they found a train station and headed east in numb shock. Ms. Davoren returned home to Orient Point while Mr. Halsey sought further treatment at Central Suffolk Hospital. He is doing fine.

Betty Goldrich and Cara Galowitz

Betty Goldrich and her partner Cara Galowitz were in their apartment on North Moore Street just eight blocks north of the World Trade Center when they heard the first plane crash. Downstairs, pandemonium reigned in the lobby and a bloodied man who had been struck by falling glass told them about the terrorist attack. Panic engulfed the streets as Ms. Goldrich attempted to drive to their home in East Marion. She was disturbed because Ms. Galowitz wanted to stay behind. After failing to reach her by cell phone, Ms. Goldrich began searching for an available pay phone. She managed to find a phone and convince Ms. Galowitz to leave the city. While waiting on the corner of West Broadway and Broome Street Ms. Goldrich said, "There was a loud puff and everyone was screaming and panicking. The tower — it didn't collapse, it disintegrated. People were running, crying, hugging; people were covered in dust. I started sobbing and this woman came up and hugged me. I was so scared for Cara, I was screaming her name." Ms. Galowitz ran to escape the suffocating grasp of the huge cloud of dust from the collapse of the north tower. Later safely reunited, the two headed to Long Island.

Karen Rickenbach

East Hampton Village Mayor Paul F. Rickenbach and his wife Jean were relieved to learn that their daughter Karen Rickenbach, who worked on the 56th floor of the north tower in Sidley, Austen, Brown and Wood's human resources department, was alive and safe. When the building shook violently, she heard shouts to evacuate, so she and a co-worker ran down the stairs. On the 10th floor, firefighters, charging up the steps, gave them water to rinse their mouths and instructed them to keep their mouths closed after spitting it out. Karen managed to get back to her home in Park Slope, Brooklyn but she wasn't able to contact her parents to let them know she was o.k. until 1p.m. "I was very happy to be able to talk to her," said Karen's father.

Joseph Olidort

Joseph Olidort was working in his office at Raytheon on the 90th floor of the World Trade Center, a mere five floors below the crash; fifty feet was the difference between life and death. As he exited the building, he saw firefighters carrying an obese woman down the stairs, their brave efforts unfortunately hindering the escape of others. Luckily, Mr. Olidort was able to get out of the building unharmed.

Jason Harbes

Jason Harbes, son of Monica and Ed Harbes of Harbes Family Farm in Mattituck, was working at Chase on the 28th floor. A recent graduate of Harvard, it was only his second day on the job

The War

Afganistan, Egypt, Iraq, Palestine, Libya, Somalia

By Dan Rattiner

Five years ago, I spent some time in Turkey. It wasn't a lot of time. About a month. But it was long enough to see how the government of that country operated. It was a very strange undertaking, involving businessmen, Muslims, Christians and fundamentalists. It works. And it might be something that the aides to President Bush tell him about. Because it is very relevant to the war on terrorism.

Turkey, when I was there, was being run by a very attractive female Prime Minister, Tansu Ciller. She was a businesswoman. She had many holdings both in and out of the country. And she was in the middle of a scandal.

People had such high hopes for her. They had voted her into office. Now it was turning out she was passing laws favorable to her business interests. She was losing popularity and she was losing support. People expected that she might have to call for new elections, something which she did shortly before our departure from that country.

The country over which she ruled was, and is, unique in the world. It is at the very crossroads of Europe and Asia. Muslims and Christians live and work together. And though the nation is about equally divided between them, it is the Muslim culture that is ascendant. Mosques are everywhere. And ten times a day, loudspeakers on the minarets at the top of the mosques call the faithful to five minutes of prayer. In small towns everywhere, people stop what they are doing, remove their shoes, put down a prayer rug and kneel on it facing Mecca. In the big cities, this activity does not slow or stop traffic. But ten times a day is a whole lot of times, and the effect of it, especially on non-Muslims, is sobering. As for Christians, they have nothing like it. They go to church on Sundays, just as we do here.

> It is such an odd thing. A military not in it for the power, but in it to keep the democracy going. The firemen of patriotism. It works.

For the last seventy years, Turkey has been a democracy, modeled on the British system. There is a parliament, a wide variety of political parties, coalitions, a prime minister who is selected by a coalition, and a President, which is largely a ceremonial office.

Prior to seventy years ago, Turkey was a fundamentalist state. Government was by decree, interpreting God's law from the Koran. Everybody went to religious school. Nobody went to public school. The Turkish language was written in Arabic. And people who did not abide by the Muslim rules were severely punished.

A powerful general who overthrew the existing government, a man named Ataturk, changed all that seventy years ago. The parliamentary government system was put into effect. Religious schools were outlawed. Public schools were made mandatory. Arabic was outlawed and the Turkish language had to be written with western letters. The fez was outlawed. Clerics who continued to insist on the enforcement of religious law were jailed.

It was a difficult transitition. But it worked. And while I was there, Ciller, the Prime Minister, decided to appoint a new President, the leader of a Muslim religious political party. She did this in the hopes of finding enough votes to get her through the coming crisis.

How this might make sense is very simple. The existing breakdown of political parties in Turkey consisted of perhaps eight western democratic parties which could be counted on to garner 70% of the vote and two fundamentalist Muslim parties, who might be counted upon to restore a fundamentalist government, garnered the remaining 30% of the vote.

After we left the country, the following things happened. Ciller, her popularity in steep decline, resigned. She then joined in coalition with the new President she had appointed, and between them were able to put together a new government, with the Muslim leader as Prime Minister while she became President.

I was curious to see how all this was going to work out, and so after returning to the States, I followed the interesting politics of this country for awhile. The new Prime Minister assured the nation that he had no intention of dismantling democracy. But then he proposed laws that would send the country down the road in that direction... and the military staged a coup that overthrew him.

Turkey has a huge military apparatus for a country of its size. It is, indeed, the fourth largest military in the world. And though, in theory, it reports to the Prime Minister, in practice, it reports to the democracy that Ataturk put into place in 1933. If the generals sense that the fundamentalists are starting to regain power, they close down the government. They act as caretakers for a month or two. And then they have new elections. The fundamentalists are simply not permitted to pull the levers of democracy... at least not for long.

It is such an odd thing. A military not in it for the power, but in it to keep the democracy going. The firemen of patriotism. It works.

To be honest, I have become an admirer of how democracy works in the very difficult situation that is Turkey. And having learned how this dynamic works between fundamentalists and western democrats, without it flaring into violence, has given me, and I hope it has given you, a perspective on who it is in the world that is our "enemy." Our enemy is the extreme right wing of Muslim fundamentalism. The wing that wants to kill us because we are not them. In varying degrees in various countries, it shows itself. There is terrorism.

Here is a rundown of countries that have to deal with this situation, as best as I know them.

AFGHANISTAN. About ten years ago, the fundamentalists overthrew the government. They are in power today. They harbor Osama bin Laden. Remnants of the government they overthrew are in the north, toward the border with Russia. They still control about 15% of the countryside. The fundamentalists control the rest.

EGYPT. The Egyptian government recently threw back a surge of fundamentalism that wanted to overthrow a democratic government. There were many murders and bombings. Egypt is our ally. But fundamentalism is alive and well. And the extremists are vicious.

PAKISTAN. Pakistan is our ally and has a democratic government. There are also militant fundamentalist sects throughout the country.

SOMALIA. At the tip of the Saudi peninsula, Somalia has a fundamentalist government with a large extremist faction.

LIBYA. A fundamentalist government, overseen by a dictator, rules Libya.

IRAQ. A fundamentalist government, overseen by a dictator, rules Iraq.

IRAN. A democracy has recently replaced a fundamentalist government in this country, but the Muslim leaders have a very strong role in how the country behaves.

THE PALESTINIAN AUTHORITY. Several fundamentalist groups, within the Authority, are currently active in terrorist activities, primarily in Israel.

UNITED STATES. As recent events have shown, extreme fundamentalist sects bent on our destruction may be few and far between but can be extremely active right here. Many of the fifteen men involved in the four hijackings have been in this country five years or more.

To a greater or lesser degree, extreme fundamentalists are active in Syria, Algeria, Morocco, Sudan, Lebanon, the U.A.R., Saudi Arabia, India and Myanmar (formerly Ceylon).

Sorting out who is our enemy and how we are going to deal with them is going to be a daunting task indeed.

The Crusaders Took Mecca and Jerusalem. Bin Laden Wants Them Back

By Dan Rattiner

People who know me know that I wear, around my neck, symbols of several of the world's great religions. I do not wear these symbols because I figure if one isn't the right one in the eyes of God, than another one is the right one. It is because I believe that all these religions, with their various spiritual leaders, are on the right path. And instead of choosing just one to express my faith in a divine being, I like to think that these different religions can co-mingle with one another, and by doing so be more likely to create a world filled with love and peace than one filled with war.

The truth is that until now, organized religion, or the extremists of organized religion, have caused more hardship, death and destruction in the world than anything else. One has only to look at the death of Jesus, or the perpetrators of the Crusades, to realize the truth in this. Believe in what we believe, or die, has been a theme since even before the Pharaohs ordered the enslavement of the Jews.

As for the Christians and Muslims, they went to war, determined to impose their interpretation of things on everyone else…

From this perspective, it is possible to answer the question, "what do these people want?" when referring to the motives of the attackers of New York and Washington. They do not want land, or control, or freedom for their peoples. They want us dead, all of us, who, from bin Laden's perspective, believe in something other than what he believes in. Bin Laden believes in prayer, strict religious law and the Muslim Way. He also believes that people should live their days by God's law, not by laws created by people. He therefore considers democracy, socialism, communism, monarchies and even dictatorships to be evil competitors of God's Law.

Indeed, there are people in all religions who believe it to be sinful for people to spend their days in anything other than the following of God's laws. There are fundamentalist Christians, orthodox Jews, Buddhist Monks and so forth that come to mind.

But now, as has so often happened in the past, there is someone, or a group of someones, who have stepped over the line. One can believe in something yet also believe, as all religions decree, to live and let live, to allow others to have their differing opinions, to support life. It is right there in the Bible, the Koran, in every religious book of God.

And then there are those who take it a step further.

In May of 1998, bin Laden announced the formation of an "International Islamic Front for Jihad against America and Israel to retrieve for all Muslims the two holy sites, now located in Palestine and Saudi Arabia, that were lost in the great Crusades."

Three months earlier, bin Laden issued a "fatwa," or religious decree, declaring that "these crimes and sins committed by Americans (and their Allies) are a clear declaration of war on God, his messenger and Muslims." It goes on to say that Muslims should kill Americans — including civilians — anywhere in the world they can be found.

An article reporting this was published in the 2/25/98 Washington Post referring to a bin Laden interview published in the British Islamic newspaper Al-Quds Al-Arabi two days before. Bin Laden confirmed this news later by faxing approximately the same declaration to a variety of American embassies in the region.

And so, by his statements about the "two holy sites" and the "Crusades," and by his attacks, bin Laden is picking up where things were left off in the Eleventh Century. And he has invited us to join him in having another go at it. We are accepting the challenge.

It is important to understand, I think, what went on in the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries in that part of the world. It is a fact that the three major religions in the region, Christianity, Judaism and Muslim, all believed in one God, all believed in the Bible, but disagreed about how God made his appearance on Earth. Christianity was in ascendancy in the north of Europe, the Muslims were in ascendancy in southern Europe and the Arab lands, and the Jews, who were very few in number, were scattered to tiny enclaves from the Urals to the Atlantic Ocean and from Northern France to central Africa.

As for the Christians and Muslims, they went to war, determined to impose their interpretation of things on everyone else. They fought with swords and spears, bows and arrows and battering rams. The Muslims were in the ascendancy at first, a group known as the Moors overrunning almost half of what is now Spain. But then the Christians launched three successive Crusades. The Muslims and pagans were to be converted or killed. And Jerusalem liberated.

Here is how William of Tyre, a Christian, described the taking of Jerusalem in 1099 at the climax of the First Crusade.

"Now that the city was taken, it was well worth all our previous labors and hardships to see the devotion of the pilgrims at the Holy Sepulchre. How they rejoiced and exulted and sang a new song to the Lord! For their hearts offered prayers of praise to God, victorious and triumphant, which cannot be told in words. A new day, new joy, new and perpetual gladness, the consummation of our labor and devotion, drew forth from all new words and new songs. This day, I say, will be famous in all future ages, for it turned our labors and sorrows into joy and exultation; this day, I say, marks the justification of all Christianity, the humiliation of paganism, and the renewal of our faith. `This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in it,' for on this day the Lord revealed Himself to His people and blessed them."

Osama bin Laden wants Jerusalem back. And he wants Mecca back. He considers the current rulers of Saudi Arabia — he is a Saudi, the son of a Saudi millionaire businessman — to be the same evil Satans as he considers all Americans, a view which caused the Saudi rulers to seize his passport and send him fleeing to Afghanistan.

Reviewing all of the above, you might ask — how could a Muslim zealot consider Westerners, many of whom give only lip service to any religion — to be the successor to the Christian crusaders and so the object of his anger?

Here is the definition of Jihad, as found in the book Islam for Non-Muslims. From this definition, it is possible to see how an extreme interpretation of this definition could cause someone to murder innocent people to gain favor with the Lord. I italicize the last two sentences.

"It is an Arabic word the root of which is Jahada, which means to strive for a better way of life.

"Jihad should not be confused with Holy War; the latter does not exist in Islam nor will Islam allow its followers to be involved in a Holy War. The latter refers to the Holy War of the Crusaders.

"Jihad is not a war to force the faith on others, as many people think of it... There is an explicit verse in the Qur'an that says, `There is no compulsion in religion' Al-Qur'an: Al-Baqarah (2:256).

"Jihad is not a defensive war only, but a war against any unjust regime. If such a regime exists, a war is to be waged against the leaders, but not against the people of that country. People should be freed from the unjust regimes and influences so that they can freely choose to believe in God (Allah).

"Not only in peace but also in war Islam prohibits terrorism, kidnapping and hijacking, when carried out against civilians. Whoever commits such violations is considered a murderer in Islam."

The common interpretation of this definition is that it refers to a regime where Muslims are oppressed and prevented from observing their religion. It is God's wish that people rise up against such oppression, something that just about anybody would agree with.

It is a stretch to consider Jihad to bless fighting non- believers. And it is an obvious perversion to interpret it as an excuse for murder.

The affairs of man are much better off when they are conducted under laws created by the people who live by them, and when religious beliefs are considered a private matter. Probably 95% of the world's population believes that now. Our task is to convince the other 5% to let us believe what we want to believe while we let them believe what they want to believe. And those among the 5% who commit murder — as has just been done — in some weird eleventh century interpretation of their religions will get what they deserve. ●

GEORGE, THANK YOU.

You changed our lives.

Before we bought the Marquis Spa from you, our lives were completely boring. My husband was never home, he worked 18 hours a day at his law firm.

To keep busy, I jogged, joined volunteer groups, shopped 'til I dropped.

We never saw each other. It was terrible.

Since you installed the spa, our lives have really changed.

The warm water bubbling from those therapeutic heads completely relaxes us.

Look at this picture. We spent a fortune on different backdrops to fit our every mood. This one is a wooded lake. Another one is a deserted tropical beach. And another is...well it's just too personal to talk about.

The Twins

An Interesting History Of The Port Authority Of New York And Robert Moses

By Dan Rattiner

On Tuesday evening, twelve hours after the World Trade Center fell, I received a phone call from a man who said he was a retired New York fireman, now living in East Quogue, and he wanted to talk to me about the tragedy.

"Are you going to write about the World Trade Center?" he asked me.

I told him that we were all too stunned to write much.

"Well, if you write about it," he said, "keep in mind that when it was built, it did not conform to the New York City fire codes. I know. I was there. The building was built by the New York Port Authority. Completely independent of either New York or New Jersey. They had their own codes. And they were lousy. Wiring going up through the ducts 110 stories with no firebreak. Don't let anybody kid you."

I had no idea what to do with this information. I thanked him. The buildings had just been knocked down by terrorists. I told him I would keep it in mind.

The thought, however, lingered. And so then I recalled the history of the twin towers, from their conception by a huge organization named the Port Authority Agency. It seems worth telling.

> I took an elevator up, then took another elevator up… On the 108th floor, it stopped… It was immediately clear to me I had absolutely no business being there.

The courage to build the World Trade Center, and in 1966 when they broke ground for it it was, by far, the largest building project in the world, came from a man who had virtually nothing whatever to do with it. That man was Robert Moses.

Moses, as a young man, was the architect of practically all the parks, beaches and parkways on Long Island. He brilliantly anticipated the needs of the suburbanites who were moving out of the city, and, working through the state as the head of the New York State Park Commission, he built Jones Beach, Hither Hills in Montauk, the Northern and Southern State Parkways and literally dozens of other major facilities that dot the island and provide recreation and fun for those who use them. The Robert Moses State Park was named after him. Moses wielded enormous power.

From Parks Commissioner, Moses was appointed, during the Depression Years, as head of the new Triborough Bridge Authority. This authority was supposed to regulate transportation between the Boroughs. By the 1950s, however, Moses had managed to build a virtual dictatorship out of this Authority. Every penny that came in from tolls at these water crossings went to the Triborough. When he signed on, there were six bridges and no tunnels. By the 1950s, there were eighteen bridges and two tunnels. Moses had built the Verrazano, the Throgs Neck, the Triborough, the Queens Midtown Tunnel, the Bronx Whitestone Bridge and many more. The money from the tolls was huge for that time — nearly a billion dollars a year. It rivaled, in scope, the entire budget of the State of New Jersey and the Budget for the City of New York. And Moses, as he aged, lauded his power over everyone. His nation, Triborough, had a capital, Randalls Island. It had its own flags, its own license plates, own area code, even its own constitution. And its police were practically an army, navy and air force.

I think it was in reaction to Robert Moses that in the late 1950s, the Governor of New Jersey and the Mayor of New York, with the blessing of Governor Rockefeller, created the Port Authority, an agency which had control of all crossings between New Jersey and New York, but which reported to New York and New Jersey. By the Kennedy era, someone at the Port Authority got the idea of building a huge World Trade Center at a point where the PATH trains came in from New Jersey to meet up with the New York Subway System. They brought in members of the financial district, the building unions, the city bureaucracy and the various railroads, subways, ferries and busses to make, at that central point, these two huge twin towers as a headquarters for this agency, and for Wall Street.

I had met Robert Moses once, around 1967, when he was out here to visit the Kirk Park Pavillion in Montauk, which had been built with money he had helped raise. He was here visiting the Speaker of the New York State Assembly, Perry Duryea Jr., a Montauk resident, who was another power in the state. This was Duryea's home turf. He wanted to show Moses what they had done. And so the two of them spent some time in the park and as the publisher of the local paper, I walked with them for awhile. Moses was very soft spoken and happy that day.

At this particular time, construction on the World Trade Center was in progress and it was rising there in southern Manhattan. My opinion of it — and I was an architectural student at the time — was that it was an awful looking building, cold and gleaming, a boring cereal box, actually two identical cereal boxes, taller than the Empire State Building and therefore, in 1970, the two tallest buildings in the world.

But even that was disturbing. Which one was the tallest? They were a tie. So now what was the tallest building in the world?

One day in 1969, I took the subway to the World Trade Center to see them up close and personal. I was told that they were open, that people were in them, but that they were still building the very top floors. You could go in. But up only so far.

I also learned the name of the Japanese architect who designed the World Trade Center, Minoru Yamasaki, and as I stood in the main courtyard between the two towers and looked up, I felt a chill of vertigo come through me. The buildings were so out of scale and so huge, there seemed no way that they could have won architectural awards, which, I was told, they had.

I went in. The elevators in the lobby took you up only so far, and then you had to change. There was an elevator to take you all the way up to the top floor, but it was closed, of course.

So I took an elevator halfway up, then took another elevator up, got out of that, and there, to my surprise, was still ANOTHER elevator. I took that up. And on the 108th floor, it stopped, the door opened, and I got out into a vast indoor construction site. There were men with welding torches, men with ladders and hard hats. It was immediately clear to me I had absolutely no business being in there. And so, to be able to stay awhile, I pretended that I did.

I sauntered over to a makeshift lunch wagon in the very center of this open space.

"What'll it be, mac?"

"Coffee regular and a powdered donut," I said.

I looked around. The open space was vast and went all the way to the windows on three sides. Near the fourth side were the elevator banks. I got my coffee and walked all the way over to one of the tall vertical windows and tried to look down. It was so filthy both inside and out you could hardly see through it. I went right up to the window. Pushed my nose against it. I could make things out. And then there was a gust of wind and the whole building swayed. Normal, I thought. With these new building materials, buildings sway with the wind.

"Can I help you?" a man in a hard hat asked.

I explained I was an architectural student who had come up on curiosity. I asked if I could get up on the roof. He said no, and as a matter of fact I would have to leave now.

"How did you even get up here?" he asked.

I told him I didn't know. And that is how I became

Reunion

460th Fighter Squadron Veterans In Montauk For Four Days

By Dan Rattiner

It is only by coincidence that, as we prepare for war, a group of major American military heroes from World War II are holding their annual reunion here. The military men are the members of the 460th Fighter Squadron, an outfit that served in the Pacific, flying warplanes against Japan from 1942 until war's end. They are here at the Montauk Manor, where their annual reunion, months in the planning, is being held.

> "What happened on Ie Shima was that two Japanese transport planes… arrived there. This was a remarkable thing, because the surrender had not yet been arranged. Why would enemy transports be coming there?

They arrived on Tuesday at the Manor, and then on Wednesday, on board a tour bus, the men and their wives visited Gabreski Airport in Westhampton, took a tour through the facilities of the Air Rescue Service, went to the wine district of the North Fork and visited New Suffolk, the home of the first submarine ever constructed in America, before returning to Montauk for an opening banquet. Thursday there were more tours, and on Friday they will go by horseback and wagon through Deep Hollow Ranch in Montauk and have a late afternoon luncheon banquet back at the Manor. On Saturday, they will return home.

I spoke at length with Bob Glaudino, a veteran of the 460th, who has been coming to Montauk for the past thirty years on vacation and who organized this year's event.

"Quite a few men and their wives couldn't make it because the planes weren't flying," he said. "But still we're a total of 30 veterans. We come and reminisce. And every year we are hosted by a different member of the group somewhere around the country. Though my wife and I make our home in Commack, we were asked to organize the reunion this year, and so we arranged it at the Montauk Manor. We're having a wonderful time."

Glaudino has spent his whole life around airplanes.

"Growing up in the Bronx, I started building models when I was eleven. I knew all the World War I heros."

Glaudino's father, an immigrant from Italy, supported the family by selling sewing and stitching machines in the garment district.

"These were special machines, and they only made them in Germany. In the 1930s, after Hitler came to power, he had a hard time selling them in the garment district — where many of the executives were Jewish — until competing manufacturers, during the War, were able to get the casting machines out of Germany and bring them here. It was easier for him then."

The Senior Glaudino was very grateful to be an American.

"I remember at every holiday he would fly the American flag," Glaudino said.

Glaudino went to the Roosevelt Aviation School on Long Island, graduating as a mechanic in 1939. During the next few years he worked as a mechanic for several commercial airlines, most notably Pan Am where he worked on the first Transatlantic Seaplanes, Flying Boats, that flew passengers across the ocean with several refueling stops.

"War broke out, and I wanted to join the Air Force," he said, "but because of the work I was doing I was deferred. It was considered valuable on the home front. For awhile, I worked as one

NEW PRESS ENTERS THE LITERARY ARENA

By Jerry Cimisi

As a poet, Joan Handler once thought: "What is the chance of being published? Very minimal."

Perhaps it was because Ms. Handler began writing at a more mature age – she was in her forties – she was able to look past the more common optimism of youth and assess the problem of art and the marketplace.

The result was the establishment of CavanKerry Press in 2000. "It is named after the two counties my parents came from in Ireland," said Ms. Handler. In the autumn of that year the press published two titles, A Day This Lit by Howard Levy and Kazimierz Square by Karen Chase. Other titles have followed this year.

Ms. Handler, who grew up in Edgewater Park, in the Bronx, said, "I didn't start writing until I was forty-two. And I began looking around at what was being published. I saw a lot of good work not getting published."

Does she feel there is a "poetry establishment"?

"Oh, I absolutely do." She said it was not so much a certain group but "a certain aesthetic bias."

Handler went on, "Some money came to us, and Alan earmarked a certain amount for the press. Basically I got the O.K. to spend $200,000 in the first year.

Handler's dream to start a press would include an attempt to publish as many first-time books of poetry as possible. The first two poets, published a month apart in the fall of 2000, Howard Levy and Karen Chase, had been published in such noteworthy periodicals as Poetry and The Paris Review (Levy) and The New Yorker and The Yale Review (Chase).

CavanKerry's third publication, The Breath of Parted Lips, is an anthology of poets who have been involved in the ongoing festival and workshops at the Robert Frost Place. Joan Handler, in the first years she began writing, attended the festival there. Appropriately, the first volume begins with some of Frost's poems and the first of those is, not surprisingly, "The Road Not Taken."

The next publication by CavanKerry was Carolyn Kizer, Perspectives on Her Life and Work, which is to be followed by So Close, the poems of Peggy Penn and next year there will be a collection by Joan Handler herself, titled Glorious. Her descriptions of her own work range from "in your face" to "so far out on the edge." She says there is a distinct Jamaican influence on her poetry.

CavenKerry books are trade-size softcover, with a French fold flap. "Books are art pieces," said Ms. Handler. There is a great deal of consideration put into the design and layout of each volume. "They should be as beautiful visually as they are to read."

Handler said that the American public is not, as a whole, very enthusiastic about poetry. She feels that poetry is seen as something belonging to academia – and the public is happy to keep it that way. "One of the reasons poetry doesn't exist for most people in 'the real world' is that people don't think they can understand poetry," said Handler. So she would definitely like to get poetry "out there. I'm for selling books in Victoria's Secret if that's what it takes. "

All of CavanKerry's authors are heavily involved in promoting his or her book. With each publication, 100-150 galleys are sent out to the media. There is problem about trade paperbacks getting reviewed, though, Handler added, Karen Chase was reviewed by Publisher's Weekly and Howard Levy was reviewed by the Virginia Quarterly. Both books were nominated by Forward, a poetry publication. "We didn't win, but we were the only press with more than one nomination."

CavanKerry is a not-for-profit company. "No matter how well we do," said Handler, "if we sold a million dollars worth of books, the profit will go back into the organization. We have an agreement with anyone that we publish that they sign on for some sort of community outreach program."

At Guild Hall in East Hampton, on Sunday, September 23 at 5 p.m., CavanKerry will celebrate its beginning with readings by its writers.

review: gross points

By Jan Silver

Alec Baldwin puts a load of energy into Johnny Checco, the superstar of stage and screen who is the central character in Gross Points. Ira Lewis's comedy is receiving its world premiere production now at Bay Street Theatre, Sag Harbor. Checco embodies all the cliches of a big-name celebrity – self-centered, talented, insecure, demanding, greedy, generous, neurotic – and Baldwin appears to be having a ball bringing Checco to life.

He struts about the stage revealing Checco's arrogance and insecurities. Playwright Lewis gets his licks in against egotistical superstars who think of themselves as Shakespearian actors, and bemoans the dearth of dramatic plays or serious movies produced because superstars always want to be heroes.

Baldwin is aided and abetted by a superb cast, a very striking set, and the quickly-paced comedic direction of Stephen Hamilton, a fine actor/director who is also the executive director at Bay Street. The play still needs some trimming, perhaps in Act I, but the inflated Checco and his cohorts all have wonderful moments of mischief in this satiric comment on the entertainment industry.

Checco is insatiable. Baldwin almost makes him a manic Al Pacino-type in Act I. He is so insecure that he looks to his always-in-control assistant Vincent, unflappably played by John Beuscher, to manage his life. Their discussion of "gross points," the percentage of a movie's gross box office sales offered to a star as partial compensation, is hilariously silly.

Struggling playwright Larry Rubin (Chip Zien), who has a play Checco wants, is a calm and intelligent foil for the superstar's histrionics. Jack Ryland is uproarious as Samuel Sidney, an affected but seasoned director brought in to harness the uncontrollable star. James McCaffrey as Harry Strugates, the California agent representing the demanding actor, patiently hears Checco's rantings because he knows it's all part of the business. And the lone female character Stella, deliciously portrayed by Aria Alpert, gives Checco his comeuppance in Act III. (Acts II and III are brief, with a pause between them.)

Bay Street's resident set designer Gary Hygom creates a sleek New York office for Checco, right down to an "Andy Warhol" silkscreen triptych of the star hanging on the wall. Checco's office cleverly turns into a backstage area in Act II. Eric Schlobohm's lighting and Randall Freed's sound design highlight the action on the set. Greg Wilson's street-clothes costuming indicates each character's personality, and stage manager Brian Meister finishes the set with all the "tchotchkes" and decorator touches of a superstar's office.

Gross Points plays Wednesdays to Sundays at Bay Street Theatre, Sag Harbor, through September 30. For tickets ($35-50), call the box office at (631) 725-9500. Bay Street then begins its fall weekend entertainment series. The schedule is online at www.baystreet.org or available at the box office.

the first tourist to the top of the World Trade Center.

In the years that followed, I visited the World Trade Center many times. Robert Moses, his days of power at an end, retired to a small cottage in Babylon Village in 1969. The World Trade Center held an informal opening that year, then a formal ribbon cutting on April 4, 1973. The buildings would stand just 28 years.

The closest I ever came to liking the World Trade Center was the year they were part of what I think was about the best television commercial I have ever seen.

The spot, which ran for thirty seconds, was a promotion for Channel 11. It appeared on Channel 11. On the screen, a Channel 11 newscaster was leaning on the railing of the Staten Island Ferry, facing the camera, with about a half mile of open water behind him and behind that the twin towers of the World Trade Center. They sort of stuck out of the top of the newscaster's head.

"I am on a search," the newscaster said. "A search for a symbol, some sort of icon, for our television station Channel 11. What could it be? I will search the City far and wide, take as long as it takes, because I am convinced that somewhere, somehow, there is a symbol that is just perfect for Channel 11. Do you know what it might be? If you have a suggestion, mail it to us. It's got to be out here somewhere."

I once went to a modern dance concert on the plaza by the World Trade Center — they held outdoor artistic events there — in which the daughter of some Russian immigrant friends of mine was performing. Little Mascha, then 9 years old, was a delight on the little stage and we had a wonderful time. Today, Mascha is a freshman at the University of Michigan. Her father Mischa commutes to Princeton from New York where he works for a software company. Her mother Natasha is at N.Y.U. Law School, and the World Trade Center is gone.

On Tueday morning, at 8:30 a.m., Natasha climbed the steps out of the subway at the World Trade Center and immediately saw that the North Tower was on fire about sixty floors up. People on the street were all talking about it. A fire? An explosion? Natasha had three minutes to get to class in an N. Y. U. building on Worth Street. This was two blocks away. She got there, the lecture began, and about ten minutes into the lecture someone came in to say that the South Tower was also on fire and the whole area was to be evacuated and everyone had to get out of there fast. Natasha got out of the building and ran north. She was in midtown when the first of the Twin Towers went down.

There has been considerable discussion about whether the Twin Towers should be rebuilt. Most people hope that they will. You can't keep us down for long. A few people think the land should be made into a memorial park for the 5,000 people who died there.

Then there is the commercial perspective. There is one hundred million square feet of rentable commercial space in the City of New York. Ten million square feet of it was at the World Trade Center. Until ten million square feet is built there is going to be a shortage.

People say we have to bring to justice the people who did this. But the people who did this are dead. Only their accomplices and organizers remain.

What is a Jihad? Nowhere in any religious bible, the Koran, the New Testament, the Old, is it written that believers should kill those who do not share their beliefs.

And yet, apparently, there are people who interpret things that way, and who are able to persuade otherwise rational people to not only kill others but to sacrifice themselves, leaving their families and friends for... what? A better spot in heaven?

One remembers the Moors, the Crusaders, the Barbarians, killing others who did not share their religious beliefs, or, in the case of the Barbarians, just for the sport of it.

This is the monstrous thinking we face. And the goal, as outlined by our President, is to attack those who go ahead with this behavior, and those that shelter them, wherever they might be on the face of the earth. ●

Rescue workers are in need of boots, gloves, surgical face masks, bottled water, sports drinks, aspirins, Tylenol/Advil, bandages, dog food, eye saline, hard hats, tents/tarps, handwipes, blankets, towels, safety goggles, flashlights, batteries, white tee-shirts (new), underwear for men and women, sweat pants and rain slickers.

BREAKING NEWS

Lizzie Grubman Indicted

A Grand Jury has indicted New York City publicist Lizzie Grubman for allegedly backing an SUV into 16 people, injuring them, out front of the Conscience Point Inn in Southampton on July 7. The indictment consists of 26 separate charges, including leaving the scene of an accident, operating a Motor Vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, 11 counts of second-degree Assault, 11 counts of second-degree Vehicular Assault and 2 counts of third-degree assault. Grubman, who is out on bail, pleaded not guilty to the charges when she heard them. She is to appear in court again on October 15. If convicted of all charges, she could serve a maximum of 4 to 8 1/3 years in prison and a minimum of 2 years. The judge ordered her driver's licence suspended. She had previously surrendered her passport.

The Grand Jury of Suffolk County convened for 12 days to consider the charges against Ms. Grubman. They took testimony from 37 witnesses and viewed 28 exhibits. They decided NOT to indict Ms. Grubman on first degree assault charges, which could have resulted in a 15 year prison term. First degree assault is assault with intent to cause harm. Second degree assault is generally considered something more caused by recklessness, particularly with a dangerous vehicle or instrument.

On the other hand, the charge of driving while under the influence of alcohol was not included in the District Attorney's original charge, but was added by the grand jury after hearing the testimony.

at the World Trade Center. He managed to escape the disaster.

Ted Weissberg

Ted Weissberg of Amagansett was biking across the Brooklyn Bridge en route to his office one block east of the World Trade Center when he spotted flames and smoke rising from the north tower. Worried about his co-workers, he continued toward his office and locked up his bike a few blocks from the site. He then heard and felt the second blast and witnessed the ensuing panic. Jumping on his bike, he retreated across the Brooklyn Bridge with the fleeing crowd to safety.

Carey Maslow

Carey Maslow of Montauk and Manhattan was late for work on the 16th floor of building two of the World Trade Center having been delayed by paperwork at her son's school. As she emerged from the subway at Park Place she "saw the two buildings burning, like two candles. People were crying, bleeding and running–chaos. It was terrifying." From two blocks away, Ms. Maslow saw tower one collapse followed by a cloud and a rush of people and then the crumbling of tower two. "People were very good. Restaurants were giving out water. People were gathering around cars that had their radios on."

Aquin Medler

Aquin Medler, a New York City police officer, started his shift as a member of Manhattan's Traffic Task Force at about 9 a.m. Minutes after the first plane hit the north tower, he was sent to the World Trade Center to control the chaotic traffic. He was standing beside the second tower when the crippled structure gave way under its own weight and came crashing to the ground. Blinded by smoke, dust and debris, he and another policeman sought safety in a bus that had been abandoned in the middle of the road. They squeezed under the seats in search of air and, as the two strangers fought to survive, they made a pact that if they made it out alive they would have a beer together as a celebration of life. They also promised that whoever found a of the eight mechanics going over and giving opinions about all the new proposed military airplanes the Army was considering. I was at Wright Field in Dayton, Ohio. Orville Wright visited us. Then Igor Sikorsky, who was a White Russian and had built the first military helicopter. I had lunch with him several times. And his machines were accepted. Then Jimmy Doolittle, the famous aviator, was called up and visited us. I wanted to be called up so badly. Finally, I went to the draft board and simply lied about what I did. They had to accept me. I was sent off to pilot training school in Texas where I graduated as a pursuit pilot."

Initially, Glaudino was trained to go to Europe to fight the Germans, but after getting overseas training in Talahassee, Florida and then being sent out to New York to await the arrival of the Queen Mary, which had been fitted out as a transport ship, the plans changed. By this time, 1944, the German Air Force had almost been decimated. He was really needed in the Pacific where the Japanese Zeros were fighting the American Wildcats to a standstill. They sent him back to Florida and then, by transport plane, to the Phillipines where he received still further training.

"It was here that I was assigned to the 460th Fighter Squadron, the Black Rams," he said. "With my training, I was made an engineer. I was responsible for the maintenance of all the fighters, P-47 Thunderbolts. Then I was transferred to a small island, Ie Shima, which measured two by three miles, five miles off the coast of Okinawa. Our unit, the 348th Fighter Group, had built an airfield there. We were preparing for the final invasion of Japan."

Glaudino arrived on this little Ie Shima island just two weeks after a single Japanese plane had gotten through the American defenses and dropped one bomb on the staging area for nearly 60 aircraft being flown by the 460th, destroying almost half of them. It was also two days after the dropping of the Atomic Bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

"In other words, the war was almost over," Glaudino said. "The day after I arrived, the Japanese announced they intended to surrender. I spent my time repairing the thirty planes that had been hit by that single bomb to get them back into flying condition."

Glaudino then played a supporting role in a major piece of American history, the surrender of the Japanese that officially ended the war. Years later, he found that the things he did, and the events involved in it, never made it into the history books. Glaudino researched the matter, found a telegram sent by General McArthur to the Emperor of Japan, and was able to prove what he said was so. History books have been revised.

"The surrender took place aboard the Battleship Missouri in Tokyo Bay," Glaudino said. "What I uncovered took place a few days before on Ie Shima."

Glaudino handed me a copy of the telegram and he explained it to me.

"What happened on Ie Shima was that two Japanese transport planes, called Bettys, arrived there. This was a remarkable thing, because the surrender had not yet been arranged. Why would enemy transports be coming there? I was on the island and didn't see it but I heard about it. What I heard was that they had been painted white with green crosses on the fuselage for easy identification.

"Here is the reference to it, right in this telegram. The planes were bringing Japanese diplomats bearing maps, plans and Japanese troop deployments so McArthur could look at them. McArthur was in the Phillipines. The planes landed in Ie Shima. Then a flight officer and an engineering officer — that was me — accompanied these Japanese officials in one of our transports to the Phillipines. Here. Read the transcript."

"The operation went smoothly," Glaudino said, "except for one thing. Returning to Tokyo in their two white aircraft, one of them made a crash landing in the bay. Everyone survived. It was very shallow water. The diplomats were able to wade ashore, carrying the American surrender instructions over their heads to keep them from getting wet. The surrender then went on as scheduled aboard the Missouri, the Japanese appearing in top hats, ties and tails, and a flyby of more than 1000 American planes overhead."

Glaudino served in the occupation of Japan. He was stationed at an airstrip at Ashiya, halfway between Nagasaki and Hiroshima.

"Japan was totally destroyed," Glaudino said. "There was nothing left. I went to Osaka. There were just miles and miles of devastation. I flew over Hiroshima. And I cried. How could people do this to people? At the airbase, the Japanese would come, they had no food and were hungry, and we'd hire them and pay them at the end of the day. I had no ill feeling toward them. And in every way they were polite and respectful toward us."

Glaudino was mustered out of the Air Force upon the death of his father in early 1946. He married, moved to Commack and raised three boys. For five years he worked as an aircraft maintenance inspector for American Overseas Airline and for S.A.S. In 1951, he was recalled into the Air Force for the Korean campaign, where he served stateside as a procurement officer.

"Igor Sikorsky himself flew the new, large helicopter he had invented. I was proud to appraise, approve and accept it for the Marines, the Navy and the Army. It was used extensively for Medical evacuation. It was the helicopter made famous later in the TV show MASH."

This article was not intended to single out Bob Glaudino from among the many veterans of the 460th. Indeed, the 460th served with distinction, and many of its members saw combat in the Pacific long before Glaudino's arrival. The 460th Fighter Squadron, part of the 348th Fighter Group of the Fifth Air Force, was activated in September 1942 and saw action against the Japanese beginning in New Guinea in 1943. It also served, with distinction, as the lead squadron in the retaking of the Phillipines in 1944. From Ie Shima, combat missions were flown to China and Japan beginning in July of 1945.

But Bob Glaudino was who we met in conjunction with this visit to Montauk. And so it was Glaudino's story we have chosen to tell, one among the many heros of the 460th. ●

It is important at this time to mention that many of the organizations do not want the publicity for their on-going contributions, as this should not be the focus. It is however important to show that we do care about each other. A strong example of this is King Kullen. The Cullen family has quietly worked directly with the Red Cross from the moment it happened. Trailer trucks have delievered food, water and supplies...always ready for the next needed items. We can be part of their effort to help raise money for the efforts of the Red Cross by purchasing $1 or $5 coupons right at their check-out counters, with 45 stores located throughout the Long Island area this is easy to do. We are proud to have this family among our own.

Here on the East End, the community heeded the call of those in need. In the early morning hours of Friday, September 14, Hamilton Hoge of HHCM Design Associates, Inc., located on Elm Street, next to the Southampton Train Station, organized a drive to collect supplies for those involved in the rescue efforts in lower Manhattan. Simply by word of mouth, local businesses generously donated much-needed items such as food, beverages, clothing, face masks, knee pads, towels, buckets, saline solution, tents, sleeping bags and blankets. Ocean Medical in Ronkonkoma donated medical supplies, and five trucks, escorted by the Southampton Police Department, picked up the provisions on their way to a NYC precinct. Rebecca Willing, a design assistant at HHCM, Mayor Joe Romanosky, Chief James Sherry, Trustee Roy Wines, Fire Department officials and many volunteers helped organize the spontaneous drive that concluded at 1:30 p.m. when the trucks pulled away.

It is truly inspiring to witness the solidarity displayed by the American people after such a tragic incident. We can see it in the faces of rescue workers and hear it in prayers at candlelight vigils. Locally, citizens such as Mr. Hoge and countless others have helped to ease some of the suffering that we have been experiencing. Each day our friends and neighbors tell us of loved ones that have survived and those that have perished. We are touched and devastated. We will never be the same. ●

Going For The Black

Southold Teen Takes His Black Test. Does He Make It? Read On...

By Joshua May

Don't pick a fight with Eddie Deptola. Don't attack him with a rope, a knife, a stick, a sword or even a gun. If you do, there's a good chance that Eddie will kick your butt because he is a black belt in the martial arts discipline of ju-jitsu. You've been warned.

Eddie Deptola going for his black belt

Ju-jitsu is a defensive art that employs complex holds and throws to subdue an attacker or opponent. The art eschews the flying kicks, swirling punches and primal screams popularized by Bruce Lee films in favor of efficacy, though during Eddie's two-hour black belt test, which I attended on September 12. There was no shortage of flying bodies.

Eddie, who is sixteen and a junior at Southold High School, has been studying ju-jitsu for four years under the guidance of Nancy Pester at Boshido Dojo in Southold. Eddie explained, "I was attracted to ji-jitsu, which means gentle art, because it isn't offensive like other martial arts like karate. I heard about the dojo from my parents who had an antique store in Greenpoint and when the dojo moved to Southold I checked it out and really liked it. Plus, [Pester] is an amazing teacher, one of the best in the states. It's like playing football for a pro football coach."

Pester has been a practitioner of the art for more than twenty-three years and has attained the highest rank of shihan, which means teacher of teachers. She conducted the test that was attended by Eddie's parents, sister, girlfriend Amanda, a handful of curious onlookers and a few of Pester's students who had agreed to be the objects of Eddie's affections.

Before the test, Pester explained that the training in ju-jitsu begins with, "self-discipline, respect for authority, and an understanding of the tradition. The first thing a student will learn is how to bow." From this foundation the student will go on to learn katas, "which are defenses from prearranged forms of attack, such as a bear-hug or a punch." As a student earns belts of a progressively higher level (white, yellow, green, blue, brown and black), they are expected to perform the katas from prior levels with greater aptitude.

With this rudimentary understanding I sat back to watch Eddie go to work. The test began with the students bowing to their instructors and then to the pictures of the progenitors of the art hanging on the wall. Eddie began with 500 rolls and it was later explained that all black belt tests begin with an aerobic exercise of some sort. It took a good twenty minutes of non-stop rolling to complete this task, and Eddie had a good sweat going by the end of it when he began to demonstrate judo moves on one of Pester's students.

Pester called out a series of commands that sounded like someone ordering sushi, but rather than resulting in well cut tuna, her student would go flying through the air and land with a loud slap on the mat and Eddie standing over him with his fist cocked menacingly. A couple dozen throws later, Eddie began to demonstrate his proficiency with the weapons hanging on the walls around the room. Pester explained that the weapons were intended less for offensive use than for training and discipline. Eddie followed the graceful, well-choreographed moves with a series of punch and kick sequences.

With these aspects of the test accomplished it was time to move on to the demonstration of the katas. One of Pester's younger students was Eddie's attacker/victim for the first set of katas and, though he was unharmed, it was not an enviable position to be in. The student proceeded to grab Eddie in a variety of positions that you might find yourself in if you were actually being attacked and Eddie would extricate himself and violently throw his attacker to the ground.

> "I've seen him fend off six big guys just by putting one in a lock in a lock and using him as a blocker."

During the katas Eddie was confronted with the weapons and it was interesting to note that the students presented and received them with a bow. This demonstrated a respect for the weapon, one another and the art's core values.

After Eddie had finished with his younger opponent, instructor John Nobile stepped in to perform some of the more advanced moves. After a few more standing katas the two kneeled down face-to-face, with their knees touching. They began a series of complex hand and wrist holds that are designed to capitalize on an opponents pressure points and often resulted in a grimace of pain on Nobile's face. Eddie said that, "in karate, if someone attacked you, you would break their wrist in defense, but in ju-jitsu you use a wrist lock that doesn't break any bones but still stops the person."

After the test, I asked Nobile how much the holds hurt and he told me to place my hand on his shoulder and in a split-second, he had twisted my hand around, hit a couple pressure points and produced a high-pitched yelp from me. He easily threw me to the ground and we shared a good laugh while Pester explained that her teacher, "weighed maybe 95 pounds, 105 if he ate a lot. But he could control people twice his size just using joint locks and pressure points. I've seen him fend off six big guys just by putting one in a lock and using him as a blocker." Eddie was confronted with a variation of this ability when Pester gave two of her students three minutes to do anything they could to take Eddie down. They were not very successful.

Pester was pleased with Eddie's performance, so she brought out the coveted belt and ceremoniously untied the brown belt from Eddie's waist and replaced it with the black. A round of applause went up and the test was finished with the same bowing with which it began.

At many dojos, there is a tendency for students to earn their black belts and view the achievement as a finish line rather than a mileage maker, but this isn't true in Eddie's case. "I've been coming to the dojo three or four days a week for at least an hour to an hour-and-a-half. As I started o get to higher ranks, [Pester] saw that I was a good teacher. I started helping teach classes and I would be at the dojo as much as three hours a night to help teach and then take my own classes. I really like teaching and I think it's good because at this dojo you can't earn your black belt until you're sixteen, when you have more experience and you're more mature."

The evening provided for an impressive display of ability, discipline and determination that will clearly carry over into Eddie's other pursuits, whether that be on the football field, in scuba gear, at the dojo or in the Navy where Eddie expresses some interest in the Navy Seals. Or perhaps it's on to college; he hedged his bets when I asked about his future plans. Regardless of where he ends up, he'll be kicking butt.

By The Glass...

With Susan Simm

In light of last week's tragedy, it seemed sadly fitting to pay tribute to an institution, and all those who helped to create it, that promoted New York wines tirelessly and with great enthusiasm: Windows on the World. Aside from being a stunningly beautiful place, it will live forever in the memory of all of us lucky enough to have dined there.

Jim Trezise, President of the New York Wine & Grape Foundation, wrote such a lovely tribute in a special edition of The Wine Press that I felt it only appropriate to reprint here. This appeared in the September 13 issue of Mr. Trezise's newsletter:

"Windows on the World is gone. But its soul lives on in everyone who ever had the pleasure of dining there.

"Windows personified world-class – from the views to the servise, food and wine. On the 107th floor of One World Trade Center, Windows offered breathtaking views of midtown Manhattan, Long Island, New Jersey and New York Harbor graced by the statue of Liberty.

"The service was impeccable, the wine list legendary for its depth and breadth, featuring the greatest wines from around the world. Those of us from the New York wine industry were proud and grateful that many superb New York wines were listed among the best of the best.

"Windows had special meaning for the New York wine industry. It was a world-class restaurant that gave us locals a chance. Fine wines from the finger Lakes, Hudson River, and Log Island regions were featured. The Long Island Wine council held its annual "Windows on Long Island" event there, except for the years when the World Trade Center was being reconstructed after the 1993 bombing.

"On August 21, just four weeks ago, I had the pleasure of hosting a special New York Cuisine dinner at Windows for the wine judges of New York Wine & Food classic competition, who came from all over the country and abroad. Everything on the plate was grown, raised, caught, or processed in New York State, and prepared exquisitely by Windows chefs. It was the meal of lifetime – New York cuisine at its best.

"Whether we live in Penn Yan, Poughkeepsie, Peconic or Manhattan, we are all New Yorkers. We can be attacked, and we can be stunned, but we will not be defeated. And we will never give up.

"Let us replace our nightmares of this horrific catastrophe with the dream of new twin towers rising from the ashes, taller than any building on earth, to let the world know that New York is alive and well. And let us dream that one day, from a new Windows on the World, we will raise a glass to the Statue of Liberty to remind the world that freedom will always prevail.

"Meanwhile, wherever you are, please raise a glass of your favorite wine to Windows on the World and the Soul of New York."

The Not-So-Silent Sea

By Sandra Dumais

Many authors depict the ocean as a huge, dark abyss where no sound penetrates.

But is the ocean really a silent a realm?

Because of its greater density, water transmits sound much more efficiently than air. The speed of sound in air is 1100 feet per second while in water, sound travels at 5000 feet per second or 3,400 miles per hour! Sound travels as a wave which causes water molecules to be displaced close to the source of the sound. Low frequency sounds travel further and more efficiently than high frequency sounds.

Detecting Subs, Wrecks, and Fish

Man has used sound in the sea to accomplish a multitude of tasks. Sound technology was used first to determine the depth of the ocean through echo sounding. This method was much faster and more accurate than using a weighted line. Short pulses of sound are sent downward to bounce off the ocean floor and return to the surface. The depth can be calculated by timing how long it takes for the sound wave to reach the bottom and come back again.

The following equation is used: $D = (C \times t)/2$

Where: D is the depth; C is the speed of sound in water; and t is the time it takes for the sound wave to reach the bottom and return.

Echo sounders use low frequency sound signals (10-20 kilohertz) which have wide angular beam widths of 30 to 60 degrees. The width of the beam effects the resolution of the returning signal. The wider the beam, the lower the resolution, therefore, echo sounding cannot be used to distinguish detail on the ocean bottom.

Because sound travels so well in water, it was used during wartime to detect and track enemy submarines. SONAR (Sound Navigation And Ranging) technology was important in not only detecting enemy submarines, but also in preventing our own submarines from being detected. Sonar uses an echo sounder designed to send narrow pulses of sound horizontally to determine the distance to objects in the water. Side scan sonar can be used to detect schools of fish, ship wrecks and determine the structure of the ocean bottom.

More recently, sound technology has been used in a variety of oceanographic instruments. In the past, current measurements could only be taken using mechanical means. Due to fouling of the instruments by algae, these measurements could only be taken while the equipment was tended by scientists on board ships. Doppler sound technology allows current meters to be deployed unattended for long periods of time without loss of data from fouling.

Fish Can Hear and Make Noises

Sound velocity increases with temperature and pressure. For most of the ocean, water temperature decreases with depth while pressure increases, causing a sound velocity minimum at some depth (see graph). The depth of the sound velocity minimum varies over the ocean, from near the surface in polar regions to 2000 meters near Portugal. Typically, the axis of the sound velocity minimum occurs around 700 meters in the ocean. The area where the minimum occurs is called the deep sound channel and is a continuous feature in the ocean. Sound rays are refracted toward a minimum velocity, which causes the sound waves to oscillate around the axis. In this way, the deep sound channel traps sound energy and allows sounds to travel great distances. For example, a few pounds of explosives detonated off of Hawaii have been detected off San Francisco. Whales are believed to use the deep sound channel for communication because sounds from some species have been recorded over long distances.

Fish were once believed to be deaf, however they are capable of hearing sound. Fish have otoliths (ear bones) which are surrounded by fluid filled chambers. As sound energy reaches the fish, these otoliths vibrate, stimulating hair cells in the chamber. The hair cells transmit these sensory cues to the brain where they are interpreted as sound. Fish hear low frequency sounds better than high frequency sounds. In some fish, the swim bladder provides acoustical transformation of higher frequency sound and sound from long distances. Air in the swim bladder is more compressible than water and therefore is more sensitive to sound vibrations. Sound vibrations hit the swim bladder and cause it to pulsate. This movement is transferred to the otoliths, which, in turn, causes them to vibrate.

Marine organisms often use sound to find prey. Splashing sounds may indicate the presence of prey, or other fish feeding on prey. Sharks show evidence of being attracted to low frequency sounds, which is due to their lack of a swim bladder. Sharks are particularly attracted to irregularly pulsed sounds which may indicate injured prey.

Many fish have the ability to produce sound using a variety of methods and body parts, including their skeletons, muscles, and swim bladders. Fish use sound to defend their territory, to warn other fish of danger, and to attract a mate. In Long Island bays, sea robins and toad fish are known to produce sounds for territorial and/or mating purposes. It is well known that whales produce elaborate songs which are believed to be used for communication and identification of family groups.

Quiet Walk on the Beach?

Sound in the sea is used by humans as a scientific and military tool, and by marine life to communicate and find food or a mate. So, the next time you walk along the beach, stop for a minute and listen... You never know what you might hear.

North Fork Bank has made it easy to help its customers give by allowing them to transfer funds from their accounts to the September 11 Fund, as part of the Governor's request for cooperation in this effort. Mr. Kanas has been working tireless on these efforts but the need to be active as a leader and example for other industry leaders far outweighs the hours put in.

MUSICAL THERAPY

On Sunday, September 16, while America was still trying to come to terms with the tragic events of the previous week, Ron and Ellene Oehl hosted a concert of healing music at their turn-of-the-century home on Shelter Island.

The sun was setting across Peconic Bay behind the house, as Ron Oehl introduced the concert with a particularly appropriate quotation of consolation from the Old Testament Book of Ecclesiastes. Then three members of the world-renowned Julliard String Quartet – Joel Smirnoff, first violin, Ron Copes, viola and Joel Krosnick, cello-played string trios by Mozart and Beethoven from the front porch for over one hundred guests on the front lawn. The concert had been planned well in advance of the tragic events of September 11, but many of those invited were faced with the dilemma of whether or not to attend, considering the horrible events of the preceding week. However, it turned out that the consoling and restorative powers of the music were appreciated by all in the audience, which included two members who had, by the grace of God, survived the World Trade Center holocaust, Greg Clark and Nancy Bliss.

Prominently displayed from the second floor of the Oehl mansion was an enormous American flag which had been the property of Al Blasenheim, Ellene Oehl's father, when he, along with six brothers, served his country as members of the armed services during World War II. The lovely bucolic setting was further enhanced by the appearance of schools of multi-colored butterflies and by the voices of many birds singing along with the music.

The World Trade Center tragedy has forever changed our country and our lives. Ron and Ellene Oehl and their family's guests truly represented a cross section of the diverse fabric of America, from bank presidents to blue-collar workers and tradesmen. The gathering of friends heard music excellently selected and played, in a setting that could not have been improved upon. All elements came together to offer a moment suspended in time of perfect solace and renewal.

Spring Lake Golf Club

Back in 1967 when the potato farming Jurgens brothers (Fred, Herman and Charles) and local golf course builder Charlie Martin transformed an area of Middle Island woodland into a golf course, life must have been very much more tranquil than today. The 27 golf holes they built still stand much as originally planned apart from minor alterations such as the removal of overgrown trees over the greens to allow more sunlight to fall upon them.

Route 25 was still relatively free from traffic and a plethora of ugly stores and road signs and the thought of a terrorist attack on New York was still a figment of second-rate film script and novel writers' imaginations. Sadly, all these things are now forever changed.

Rick Jurgens is the President of Spring Lake and he explained that they have worked hard over the years to make the golf club a place for golfers of all levels of skill. The 9-hole Sandpiper course plays to 3,053 yards and the 18-hole Thunderbird course plays to 6,455 yards off the men's tees.

We played the Thunderbird and the opening hole straightaway challenges your ball placement off the tees – a feature we were to come up against on many other holes. At 436 yards, it is always going to be difficult for most average golfers to reach the green in two shots and the dogleg makes this even more problematical. The second brings water and waste ground into play down the left and by the time you reach this green you realize that this is a course where the greens are really going to test your skills and patience. They are large, undulating and many have steep run-off areas to take a wrongly placed approach shot well away from the pin.

At the third, the first short hole, your reaction is going to be "water, water, everywhere." At 180 yards with water on both sides and a strategically trapped, sloping green it is a good hole and one where getting par is a good achievement. The long par 5, fourth hole is a great hole and is the number one handicap hole. Very few will cover the 507 yards from the men's tees in two because the approach to the hole is a sharp dogleg right and very high trees guard this angle of attack to a green with an amazing selection of slopes, depending on the pin placement. Again, a hole where a par is a sizeable achievement.

Spring Lake is a very well kept parkland course and its beauty grows on you as you play the course. Holes are kept apart from each other very well and it is almost surprising to find how the short 6th hole is tucked away between two others.

Starting the back nine, you have to face another of the relatively short holes which have marked doglegs that require you to place your tee shot well or face a bogey or much worse! The 11th is a relatively straight forward long par 5 where big hitters can look for a birdie but so much, again, will depend on pin placement and your ability to master the contours of the green. The 14th is another of those good length challenging par 4's with a challenging green where the customary pin position is well guarded by a bunker. 15 is a hole where you look at the yardage, 333, decide this is going to be easy and then look at the hole and change your mind! Yes, if you place your tee shot correctly to open

Par 4- 393 Yards

One Great Big Eye Has a Focus in Your Direction

That would be the single, imposing bunker covering the dogleg on the right side of the fairway. To take on this bunker you must flex your driver 260 yards. You will have to deal with a column of trees if you push the ball slightly to the right. Adding to the treachery of this play is the back side of the sand trap, where thick rough travels quite a distance downward before meeting up with the fairway. The green is elevated with a tight entrance and is one of the smallest at Swan Lake. You will also need your reading glasses to detect its subtle breaks.

GOLF VACATION GETAWAYS
CACAPON RESORT STATE PARK
West Virginia
(304)-258-1022

Imagine playing a state facility such as the Bethpage Black or Montauk Downs and not having to trudge to the parking lot afterwards. Imagine not having to drive home at all. There's a state park system in America that takes these conveniences into consideration for you. For an affordable weekend getaway to a historic region that just happens to offer great golf, you may wish to consider that wild state of West Virginia.

Four state parks in the Mountain State offer championship golf with on-site lodging. Most accessible to us is Cacapon Resort in the northeast corner of the state, not far from Harpers Ferry, Md., where John Brown's band of abolitionists presaged the start of the Civil War.

The park's golf course, a Robert Trent Jones design, is challenging and scenic. The accommodations aren't really "resort" caliber, but small matter. You're in the hills and the rustic cottages are in perfect concert with the surroundings, while mindful of the comforts of home.

The golf course plays alongside one of those green Allegheny walls that are so prevalent in the mining regions of south-central Pennsylvania. In the gloaming the sense of insularity the inhabitants of this valley must feel is keen. But on a crisp autumn day, the mood must be exultant.

Trouble avails itself early and often on Jones' layout. The first two holes appear to be open confidence builders, but there is some chicanery at work on No. 2. As you're in mid-profanity with your ball aiming ineluctably toward a fairway trap, you exhale with relief as it rolls through the hard sand to the upslope of a mound backing the bunker. But this mound angles ever so slightly toward a greenside pond to your right. So, however much caution you employ on your approach, you are likely to find your shot thirsting for the hazard. Looking back at the hole, one must conclude that the sand was only a decoy!

The greens at Cacapon are not only postage-stamp size, they're the 1-cent variety. Most have pencil-neck throats but they are quite absorbant to long-irons. Scoring doesn't come easy here, particularly on the front nine, where 25 greenside bunkers put a premium on your short game.

Though you are in the hills, this is more parkland course than mountain. Beaver and squirrel mingle amiably by the edges of fairways. The course doesn't get too much traffic and plays quickly.

The roughest topography on the course is a ravine that plays havoc with the tee shots on the front nine's two par threes. If you are kicking yourself over your performance on No. 4, you are provided an opportunity for redemption at No. 8. Both holes have ravines to the left and are almost the same length (195 yards). As if to drive the mirror-image point home, Jones has created a double green for the two holes to share. Somehow, the eighth hole is the No. 9 handicap, while its identical twin is rated No. 17. My two-day totals of 11 on the 4th and eight on the ninth confirm my suspicions!

The Best 15 th Hole
(SEMI-PRIVATE & PUBLIC COURSES)
as selected by Long Island golfers
The 15th hole at Island's End Golf & Country Club in Greenport has been voted the Best 15th Hole on any Public Golf Course on Long Island's East End, by the readers of Dan's Papers.

Par 4
304 Yards
Prelude
This short, straight par 4, which hints at the legendary hole to follow, itself commands strict attention and grudging admiration. It is just 304 yards from the back tees, without fairway bunkers or water, and straight as a Kansas interstate. So what's the problem? First of all, if you hit at all to the right, you'll need to worry about what the neighbors are saying: O.B. stakes protecting backyards are a couple of club lengths away. If you bail out to the left, there is native vegetation there that might provide a home for your ball for a number of years. Two large entry traps sit menacingly on each side of the uphill green. Putting is a sweat-it-out affair with vicious breaks heading both left to right and back to front. And wait til you see what's next. . .

up the dogleg right and then if you play an approach that negotiates the very narrow entrance to the green and misses the traps, it's easy but that is a lot of "ifs." Similarly, the short 16th is rated the easiest hole on the course but this is a well-designed hole with an elevated green and major run off areas, protected by mounds at the sides and a trap, so this rating is often going to be queried. The finishing holes are excellent. 17 must be one of the best on Long Island, especially if you play from the back tees, where it measures 475 yards. The bunkers really neck in to leave a very narrow landing area on the fairway and the trees on the right come very much into play. The elevated green demands a very precise approach shot, especially if the pin is set behind the guarding bunker. The final hole is a long 541 from the men's tees and has out of bounds all along the left, a sand trap which needs a carry of 224 yards and then a very sharp dog leg entrance to the green where all kinds of hazards come into play including the cart path if you are really unlucky.

Overall, Spring Lake is a joy to play and should be on the "must play" list for all golfers in this region. It is an honest course: what you see you really do get. The bad shots are punished and good shots rewarded and the course design makes you think and not just automatically pull out your driver.

I am truly feeling not like shopping this week, so I did very little. I appreciate what all the shopkeepers are feeling and doing in this sad time of our country's loss. At press time there were no American Flags available. Every store was sold out. However, Dan's Papers will have a pull out flag in the center fold of this issue so that you can put it in your window, car, mailbox, etc. Thank you Sally Hansen for that wonderful patriotic contribution.

On a very personal note: I would like to mention that I have a personal connection with the tragedy at the World Trade Center. My condolences go out to my son Joseph Tennariello's N.Y.P.D. Emergency Service Unit (EMS). Fourteen men in his squad are missing. Joe is working with all the rescue crews, long twelve hour days, hoping to recover and rescue our brothers, sisters, moms and dads and friends. Also, my son Randy is doing twelve hour drive tours with the Green Bus Lines picking up and delivering policemen and firemen to and from the scene. I'm proud of my sons and my country. God Bless America... Until next week...

MY JOB

Today's Current Employment Marketplace Is Troublesome

It is far more productive and economical for Fortune 500 corporations to develop and reward their current/existing employees. The value of being a team player for a long-time employer has diminished. Corporations need to invest more time, money and career development on their current employees rather than have to replace them.

The current soft economy creates a more negative environment. Strong availability of talented and well-skilled candidates causes excessive competition. The marketplace has become a "buyers'" market. This creates a particularly anxious situation for the candidate who is searching for a new position in that the corporate client ("the buyer") insists on very stringent specs versus when it is a "sellers'" environment in which the "buyer" is less particular because of supply and demand. The corporate internal attitude today is "what have you done for me lately."

GENERAL ADVICE FOR PEOPLE IN THE JOB SEARCH MODE:

Concentrate on utilizing Search Firms that specialize in your area of expertise. These search firms know that particular area well and are usually called upon by clients to search out and present candidate slates with that precise experience. Major International Search Firms do not solicit resumes. Their role is to search, interview and identify the most appropriate candidates according to the job specifications.

People often get pigeonholed according to their specific discipline or disciplines and the category or categories of experience in their career. It is preferable to have experience in various disciplines and categories. International vs. domestic experience has also created troublesome situations for many people in a search mode. When your total years of experience are evenly divided between international and domestic, burdensome situations may arise. You are then usually of more value to your current corporation than to a new prospective employer. A new corporation will likely look at your most recent experience (whether it is international or domestic) and measure your worth primarily based upon that alone.

A candidate generates more interest from a prospective employer if he/she is currently gainfully employed. Conversely an unemployed candidate (whether downsized through no fault of the particular individual or not) is less attractive and often raises eyebrows and sundry questions – also the longer time a candidate is out-of-work the more troublesome it becomes. Leave yourself open and expand your horizons to other industries. Take your strong skills and disciplines learned within your career and apply them to other industries. Your talents are definitely applicable and often sought after by them.

It is crucial that you have sufficient confidence in yourself. Keep yourself "up" and never show anger or bitterness when you interview. Always show a positive – can do – attitude, show high energy and enthusiasm and strong interest in the opportunity at hand. Even though it sounds like a cliché – remember it takes only one (1) right opportunity.

THE ART OF INTERVIEWING:

Mastering the interview is an art, not a science. The worst mistake interviewees make is doing too much talking. The single major reason people don't get hired is that they keep on talking, talking, talking. Answer questions as fully as possible, and then shut up. Don't offer gratuitous information or statements. A number of psychological studies show that the greater the amount of time the interviewer spends talking, the greater the chance that the candidate will get the job. There's a subtle twist when they start talking more than you, when they are selling the job and the company to you.

Advance preparation is another necessity, so you are not surprised by questions that are open-ended. When the interviewer asks, as many do, "Tell me about yourself," the candidate should have rehearsed those qualifications that are pertinent. When you get one of those general questions, never ask, "What do you mean?" That's fatal. Ambiguous questions are asked to see how you'll handle them. The question, "Tell me about yourself" can be a trap. You don't know what they want to hear. The best plan is to direct the question yourself and get to specifics about your work and achievements as soon as you can. "What are your weaknesses?" Don't fudge too much; but with a bit of advance planning it's possible to turn a weakness into an asset, as with the reply, "I'm not good at tearing myself away from my work."

The topic of money should be handled gingerly. If the candidate talks about money early in the game, that waves a red flag. It's expected that an applicant will first want to know if the job fits his goals and skills. Never give a specific dollar answer when an interviewer asks, "What would you like to make?" Say "I'm in the 'X' range and am considering the 'Y' range."

Most companies stress a team-work environment. It is important that you show examples of your abilities to motivate other people and lead groups to work together and accomplish the task at hand. In the process of demonstrating the aforementioned, make sure you use the words "I" and "WE" appropriately and accurately. For example, the constant use of "I" leads people to question two things: 1- Your ability to work as a team and to work with others (motivating and leading). 2- Depending on your years of experience and the level of your current position, it is inappropriate to purport that you have accomplished your achievements solely – by yourself. On the other hand, the over use of "WE" leads the interviewer to question whether you have accomplished anything on your own.

Always remember you are on an interview and need to be dressed appropriately, and at all times throughout the interview be respectful and courteous. It is fine to ask questions, but all questions should be phrased and posed in an appropriate manner, not in an abrasive or discourteous way. Remember it is not just what you say, but how you say it.

Many companies utilize the Targeted Selection approach for interviews. Targeted Selection focuses on a particular skill set which has been determined by a given company to be synonymous with success. All candidates are asked the same questions and are rated on the basis of their answers.

GENERAL HINTS:

Listen carefully to the questions
Be concise – don't ramble
Show your smarts
Demonstrate high energy and motivation
Emphasize knowledge and insights about your target market
Be spontaneous – not regimental
Engage in eye contact
Arrive for the interview early
Never bad mouth your current company and use that as an excuse for leaving or looking externally.

CLASSIC CARS

Old-Fashioned Road Rallye

The Bridgehampton Historical Society's Vintage Sports Car Rallye, September 28 & 29, 2001

This is the first year the Bridgehampton Historical Society will hold a Benefit Tour on the same weekend as the annual Sports Car Road Rallye. The tour will be open to any classic car built in 1969 or earlier, and participants will be welcome at all the social events of the traditional Rallye weekend. The weekend starts with a welcome party on Friday the 28th when the drivers and their cars meet at the BHHS to register and pick up their tour information. Saturday the 29th coffee and donuts are served at 8 a.m. The tour leaves at 9 a.m. and follows a route of almost 100 miles around the Hamptons. Both historic and scenic stops will be included on the tour. When the tour participants arrive back at the Historical Society grounds they will join the Rallye cars and drivers for the Awards Party, starting at 4pm, when the winner of the people's choice award for "the favorite car" will be announced, as well as other awards. The party will wind up by 7 p.m. giving everyone plenty of time for dinner at one of the Hamptons' fabulous restaurants!

Bridgehampton and cars share a long history. In 1915 a sports car "race" was added to the events which took place during the Annual Bridgehampton Fundraising Carnival. The laps were run over a circular course that went from Montauk Highway, south onto Halsey Lane to Paul's Lane, up Ocean Road, and back along Montauk Highway. During that race some of the cars reached the awesome speed of 50 miles per hour. The races were run until 1921.

In 1949 Bruce Stevensen, Austin Clark and Alec Ullman revived the street racing idea. Most of the cars in this race were European sports cars, many from the 1920s, and they reached speeds as high as 100 miles per hour.

These races were incredibly popular and drew up to 40,000 spectators. Unfortunately, an accident in 1953 put an end to the street races. To continue the tradition organizers formed the Bridgehampton Road Race Corporation and in 1957 constructed a racetrack on 500 acres of land north of the village. For over 20 years, races of international importance took place on its winding course. Racing continued from 1957 through the 1990s. But as more homes were built near the racetrack the homeowners objected to the noise and eventually the track closed.

In 1992 The Bridgehampton Historical Society revived the roadrace tradition with a Classic Sports Car Road Rallye. The Rallye is run in segments and the participating cars must run each segment perfectly, at the speed limit, in order to win.

This year the Bridgehampton Historical Society has added a Classic Car tour in order to include a larger group of cars and drivers. The sports cars which participate in the Road Rallye must be cars which could have been driven in the original races, ending in 1953. Owners of younger classic cars not eligible for the Rallye will now have a chance to participate in the benefit weekend by joining the Tour.

Applications for entering the tour are available at BHHS. We expect this event to sell out by mid September so apply early. The donation of $175 includes admission of one car to the tour and four people to all the events. Applications are also available for the Road Rallye.

The public is invited to the grounds of the Historical Society, at the corner of Montauk Highway and Corwith Ave, (at Corwith House) to see the cars take off between 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Saturday the 29th. They are also invited to see the cars return between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. and to vote in the "People's Choice Award." There is no charge for viewing the cars. Tickets to the party Saturday afternoon are available to the public for $15 per person.

For more information about the events, contact the Bridgehampton Historical Society at 631-537-1088 or visit our website at www.hamptons.com / historical society

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

MEDIA AND THE TERRORIST ATTACK.

No, Virginia, it wasn't a rerun of the classic Sci Fi film or radio drama, War of the Worlds, that the media featured on September 11. It wasn't King Kong either or any number of movies where famous Manhattan buildings are destroyed by internal or external forces. Rather, it was real life assault and destruction on New York's World Trade Center that we saw and heard unfolding before our very eyes and ears. (Funny how it was given various Hollywood titles, like Attack on America.)

The media was more than ready, as always, to capture the sights and sounds of this continuing, horrific phenomenon: over and over again we saw the event's sequence replayed, watching the plane crash into Tower #1, hearing spectators scream on the ground, viewing the collapse of the first and then the second Twin Tower.

These initial images/ sounds (on September 11, 12) not only recorded the facts, but also established a "storyboard" as if, indeed, the event were a fictional Hollywood movie after all. Aesthetic elements conferred meaning, whether done consciously or unconsciously, on the images. First, the camera angle (featuring a worm's- eye-view of the Twin Towers, evoking power), then the composition (showing the symmetry of the still - stable structures) giving way to asymmetry and impotence as both towers fell, leaving nothing at all. Such images were mostly distanced long shots adding to their objective, unreal quality.

Conversely, the next two days' print and non-print coverage (September 13, 14) captured closer shots, as viewers got a more personal, subjective look at rescue workers looking for survivors on the scene. American flags placed in the rubble predominated many such images (as they also prevail on our own Hamptons' landscape). Other close- up views showed family members looking for loved ones.

Over the weekend (September 15) , images of President Bush carrying an American flag and giving solace to the rescue squads again featured closer shots, the camera angles once more taking a worm's-eye-view. Power, for the time being, had been restored through the visuals.

On Sunday (September 16), a reverse situation occurred: long shots of the destroyed area conveyed a bird's-eye-view. Gone were the human, personal and powerful factors. Present instead was a non-human, distanced, non-participatory perspective.

A Hamptons' Flag

While this "storyboard" is still being played out, it appears to possess both non-fictional and fictional aspects: a hybrid form that marks our Postmodern age. The documentary elements are obvious enough: real people (not characters or actors), a real story (not a script or plot), a recording of what is happening as it's happening in the actual locale.

Even so, at play here are also fictional components of high drama, Hollywood- style, including a formal plot: Introduction of the Problem (Twin Towers and Pentagon hit); Protagonists (New York's Mayor and President Bush); Objectives (to find and punishing the evildoers); Obstacles to Solving the Problem (only now being ascertained); and the Conclusion.

Yes, Virginia, wouldn't it be great if this really were just a Hollywood film after all?

The Curse of the Jade Scorpion

WOODY'S LOVE/HATE AFFAIRS WITH THE HAMPTONS AND HELEN HUNT

When Woody Allen, the big-eyed kid from little Coney Island, left his other oceanside residence later in life, he left behind one that was a lot bigger... a sort of mansionette set in the very green lawns, money and envy of the Southampton shore. With that crack in the Hamptons door closed shut, I assumed he would also shutter his comic lambasting of the East End and, as is his love/hate style of movie-making, put a lens cap on his amorous use of the Hamptons' photogenic locations. Fortunately, this did not happen. He continued to lovingly film our houses, land and seascapes and, at the same time, maliciously slur these precious places with nagging humor.

TREACLE TARTNESS

However, something else was trickling into his movies, around the moist Hamptons' scenery and his leaky, steamy, real love... Manhattan. It is a treacley, honey-amber ooze of retirement age coziness that slips and slides easily on the gooey waves of nostalgia. Woody's current, annual film release, The Curse of the Jade Scorpion, is besotted with it and, of course, his self-idolization as a potent, sex magnet (Yeah, sure!) that has young women thrust upon him to indulge his sexual attraction which is polarized, positive and negative... love and hate. In this movie, Helen Hunt is at the hate end of Woody's throbbing electrode... the poor thing is slow to receive his electric attraction and see the light. But, conversely, when the luscious Charlize Theron appears at his threshold, she whips open her coat to expose her protuberant, pulsating nakedness. So what else is new? Not much in, The Jade Scorpion, and that is the Curse.

THE SCHLEMOZZEL AS JEWEL THIEF AND SLEUTH

Eloquent production designer, Santo Loquasto, has provided all the 1940s memorabilia required . . . excepting dust and cobwebs...the story line provides those. Here it is: Woody and Helen's minds are snagged by an evil nightclub magician, David Ogden Stiers, who hypnotizes them and snaps them out of it with the code word Constantinople.Woody is made to commit robberies which, in turn, he has to investigate when he's his old, private eye self without any memory of them. Clever and slippery, the Woody way. Chuckles and titters with his and your eyes, above them, snootily looking down their noses at low level comedy. Contradictory? Not from a crafty movie maker who's old enough to know better.

The Jade Scorpion is only made of paste so it can lie out on the vanity of its maker, without trepidation.

Take Five 2001

with Jan Silver

As we try to get back into the routine of our daily lives, there is good theater, music and even a talk by a futurist, Robert Wilkinson, about "Facing the Upcoming Seasons of Change." A new comedy with Marilyn Sokol and Clive Revill opens in East Hampton this weekend. The satiric comedy Gross Points starring Alec Baldwin continues in Sag Harbor. The alternative rock band with bagpipes, Seven Nations, returns to Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Friday and the traditional Irish music group Cherish The Ladies plays Saturday in Riverhead. The Animal Rescue Fund of the Hamptons (ARF) has its annual meeting/Alumni Day on Saturday. For details on these and other entertaining events, read on:

THEATER

The play stars accomplished actress/singer/comedienne Marilyn Sokol and Tony Award-winning actor Clive Revill. It is written by actor/playwright Ed Dixon, directed by Frank Dunlop, and produced by Montauk Theatre Productions. Performances are Thursday to Sunday through October 7. For tickets ($30), call the Guild Hall box office at 631-324-4050.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

There may be a nip of fall in the night air as the calendar confirms the official end to summer. Yet, farmers markets are bulging with jewel-colored sun-ripened tomatoes in varying sizes, all manner of eggplant, peppers, potatoes and fresh beans, leek, beets, berries and peaches. What a heavenly time to cook and enjoy our local bounty.

Fresh cranberry shell beans, streaked with pink markings, and a flat-podded Italian variety of green bean are just some of the delectable fare limited to this time of the year. Cranberry (Borlotti) beans are wonderful in a salad or cooked in soup or with pasta. They do lose their pretty color after cooking however. Italian Roman beans, larger and flatter than a green bean, have a mild taste and meaty texture. Combine buttery and delicious fingerling potatoes for a green bean and potato salad with fresh dill bathed in a garlic mayonnaise. If you feel like splurging, the salad it makes a great accompaniment to broiled lobster.

While the large dark purple and the slender Italian eggplant is most commonly found in supermarkets, there are a host of others at farmers markets in round and elongated shapes in hues of off white, violet and magenta. Regardless of color or shape select eggplants that are firm, smooth and glossy. The season for eggplant is now and the way to cook them is endless. The cooked flesh of eggplant pureed with roasted garlic cloves, seasoned with lemon juice and olive oil makes a nifty appetizer when spread on toasted pita chips.

EGGPLANT AND ROASTED GARLIC PUREE

This is an adaptation of an eggplant dip prepared and served at an organic tasting with Ann Cooper, the executive chef of the Ross Institute.
Yield: 3/4 cup

1 local eggplant, about 1 pound
4 large whole garlic cloves, unpeeled
2-3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 1/4 teaspoons coarse (kosher) salt
Several grinds fresh black pepper
1/4 teaspoon ground coriander
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
*Toasted pita chip wedges for serving

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

1. Prick eggplant with a fork in several places and place on a tin foil-lined cookie sheet. Place the unpeeled garlic cloves on a large square of foil and drizzle with 1 teaspoon of the oil. Enclose the foil over the cloves and place on the baking sheet with the eggplant. Roast the garlic cloves about 45 minutes until soft. Continue to bake the eggplant for a total of 1 1/2 hours, turning once, until flesh is completely soft. Remove eggplant from oven and allow to cool. Cut eggplant in half lengthwise and scoop the flesh into a food processor with the steel knife in place. Squeeze the garlic cloves open and add the soft inside to the eggplant.

2. Puree the mixture in the food processor. Add salt, pepper, coriander, lemon juice and remaining olive oil and process to mix until ingredients are thoroughly combined. Taste to adjust seasoning as necessary. Can be prepared up to several days ahead. Transfer to a covered container and refrigerate until ready to serve. Serve as appetizer with seasoned pita chips.

*To prepare pita chips, cut into narrow wedges, dust with paprika, salt and a drizzle of olive oil. Bake in a 375-degree oven for 7-8 minutes until crisp.

FRESH CRANBERRY BEAN SALAD

You will recognize fresh cranberry beans by their pretty off-white and pink colored shells dotted with pink markings. They are available at our local farmers markets and make a tasty do-ahead protein side dish. Yield: 2 1/2 cups bean salad

1 1/4 pounds fresh cranberry beans
Coarse (kosher) salt
2-3 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
1-2 large cloves garlic, finely chopped
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1 1/2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1. Peel the pods to expose the beans as you would fresh peas. Bring 3-4 quarts of water to the boil, add about 2 teaspoons salt and put in the beans. Cook about 30 minutes until beans are tender. Drain and cool.

2. Place the beans in a mixing bowl with the remaining ingredients and toss to mix. That's all there is to it! Can be prepared up to several days ahead. If doing ahead transfer the dressed beans to a suitable container and refrigerate covered. Bring to room temperature before serving.

ITALIAN ROMANO BEAN AND FINGERLING POTATO SALAD

The dense and waxy flesh of the fingerling is perfect for potato salad as it holds it shape. Combined with the Italian flat-podded Romano bean this potato salad evolves into a very "au courant" dish.
Serves 6-8

For the salad:
1/2 pound Romano or green beans, topped and tailed
3/4 pound fingerling potatoes, peeled
Coarse (kosher) salt
2 tablespoons dry white wine
3-4 scallions, white and light green part, thinly sliced
2-3 tablespoons freshly chopped dill

For the dressing:
1 clove garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
11/2 tablespoons light mayonnaise
1 1/2 tablespoon lemon juice
Freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1. Put beans in a saucepan of boiling salted water to cover and cook about 7 minutes. Drain, dry and allow to cool. Place potatoes in cold water to cover and bring to a boil. Cook about 16-18 minutes or until tender. Drain potatoes well, pat dry and sprinkle with white wine while still warm. Put the beans and potatoes in a mixing bowl. Add the scallions and dill and stir to mix.

2. Mince the garlic with the salt until it is a smooth paste. Put in a mixing bowl with the mayonnaise and lemon juice. Season with freshly ground pepper and stir to mix. Whisk in the olive oil until completely incorporated. Pour over the salad and carefully stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Can be prepared ahead. Refrigerate, covered in a suitable container. Serve at room temperature.

Getting The House Ready For Winter

It's getting to be the time of year when geese start to contemplate their winter vacations in Florida, the leaves begin a graceful slide into hues of yellow and red and the tourists beat a retreat back to their strongholds in Manhattan. As Labor Day recedes quietly into the past, it's the time of year when hot days at the beach are replaced by hot cups of cider in front of the fire. Outdoor days become indoor days, and with this in mind, it's time to start getting the house ready for the long, cold winter ahead.

Summer is officially over on September 21, but the true harbinger of the season's end is the closing of the pool. When the weather is too cold to swim, it's time to get out the pool cover and hide that taunting memory of warmer days.

"People start closing their pools after Labor Day and continue right up into December. In the spring we usually start opening pools in April. The key to a clean pool in the spring is a late closing and an early opening," explains Shaun McGeowin of Pools by Recreational Concepts.

Before closing a pool it is absolutely essential that the pool is free of all algae and leaves and that the chemicals are balanced. Proper pH balance and chlorine levels will ensure that minimal growth will occur during the winter. Once the cover is on it is important to keep it free of leaves because they will change the alkalinity and pH of the water. McGeowin also recommends adding chlorine to the pool periodically over the course of the winter.

"The pump needs to be drained and stored and all the lines, skimmers and returns need to be blown out and filled with antifreeze. If all of this is done properly and you open the pool early you can be pretty sure you'll have a nice clean pool in the spring. But if you open later than May, you're going to have a swamp," says McGeowin.

Once the pool has been put safely to bed it's time to turn your attention to your yard. Winter weather can be harsh to shrubs and grass but with proper care they can make it through the winter without too much trouble.

"Delicate shrubs should be wrapped with burlap or fencing, especially those around the foundation of the house to protect them from snow falling off the roof," says building contractor Bill Koral of Koral Brothers, Inc. "Your lawn should be given a fall or winter fertilizer and it's important to remove all fallen leaves because they will kill your grass and prevent oxygen from getting to the soil."

If you have an irrigation system it's important to get it blown out and properly winterized. Freezing water is one of the winter's greatest threats, so anyplace there is water must be properly treated. This includes water pipes in the pool house, garage, and hose spigots.] Most air conditioning units are designed to withstand winter weather, but it's always a good idea to check manufacturer specifications for proper care.

All lawn furniture needs to be brought inside and anything else that might blow around and cause damage during blustery winter weather. Koral also recommends removing any dead tree branches, as they are apt to break in high winds and under heavy snowfall.

When getting the house battened down, attention should be given to window wells around basement windows, which should be cleared of all leaves and debris and special care should be given to ensure that all windows are properly closed. Additionally, any holes, no matter how small, should be blocked around the house foundation to prevent leaks and prohibit small animals, such as mice and raccoons, from making your home their home.

One of the most important duties to take care of is the cleaning of gutters. "You should do this after the last leaves have fallen to ensure you have no blockages when the snow starts to fall," says Koral. Blocked gutters can cause nightmares when ice builds up at the edge of the roof and slowly works its way under the shingles. Water can seep into the attic and will cause havoc, collapsed ceilings, rot and a slew of other problems that can be difficult and costly to repair. Homeowners should also take the time to check that their storm windows are properly installed, which will help keep heating costs in check and prevent weather damage to window frames and sahes.

For houses with fireplaces it's a good idea to have your chimney cleaned. Prolonged buildup of soot or animals nesting in the chimney can be an extreme fire hazard, not to mention a hinderance for Santa.

Don't forget to have the oil company top off your tank and it wouldn't hurt to have them take a quick look at the heating system to ensure that it is in proper working order. There is nothing worse than having your heating fail when the frost makes its first appearance.

By following some simple steps to get your house and yard ready for the winter, you can ensure that the winter weather will be no more than a foul memory when the sun shines again in the spring. "By properly winterizing your home you can lengthen the life of your house, save on costly repairs and retain property value," says Koral. And take heart, it's only a few months before you'll be reading about how to get your house ready for the summer.

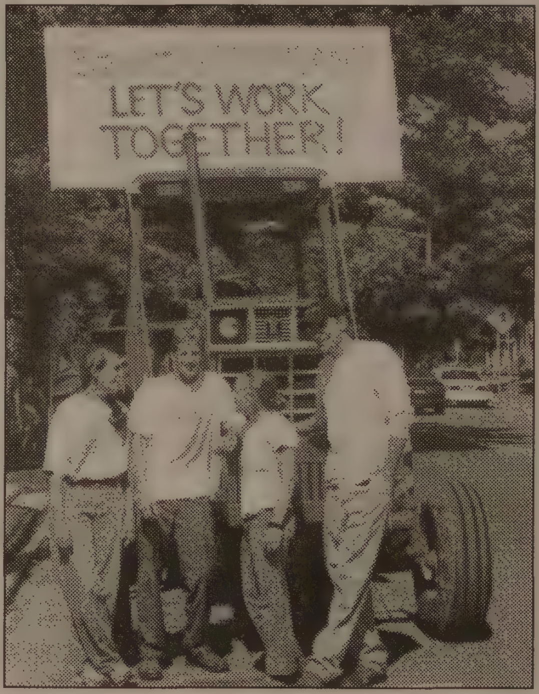
EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

The rest of our lives will never be the same after the events of this week. All the emotions of disbelief, sadness, anger and horror have shaken us to the core of our humanity. We, as Americans and as New Yorkers, are deeply affected in one way or another. We either know someone personally or are connected to families and friends who were struck by the mindless act of terrorism.

It has been a tough week for all of us trying to figure out what to do. I know I really didn't feel like working, but rather trying to see what we could do to help in some way. Also, trying to console our children has been a priority. If we, as adults, cannot rationalize the why's and how comes of this week, what about the children? If there was ever a time for family values, for prayer, for coming together as the family of man, it is now.



LET'S WORK TOGETHER!

I have great faith in our government leaders from the President to the Congress, Governor Pataki, Mayor Guiliani, right down the line, that they will provide the leadership in getting us through this ordeal. Everything will be done in order and by phases, from the search and rescue operation in New York City and Washington, DC, to the clean up, restore, rebuild and reformation of our security system. Right now, more than ever, I am so proud to be an American. To see the rescue workers, firemen, police, EMT's, medical workers and the general public pull together is just inspiring. We need to put off worrying about revenge for the moment; that will come when the perpetrators are found out. Instead, we need to concentrate on healing and rebuilding our confidence as a country.

This morning, I have been talking to my Farm Bureau leaders about how we can help in some way. We will help out financially by donating to the Red Cross and other relief organizations. But in addition, more immediately, we are working together with Cornell Extension and restaurants to get food into the relief effort in New York City for the workers. We are getting donations from farmers in addressing that need. The entire farm community wants to help. Our prayers, thoughts and sympathies go to victims, their families and loved ones. Also, our thanks to the thousands of rescue workers from across the country. They are all our heroes. How our nation responds to this national tragedy will define our liberties from this point forward. May God give us the courage to overcome this nightmare.

Next week we were going to travel to Washington to visit the Congress on the next "Farm Bill." That has been cancelled, rightfully so. Somehow worrying about policy issues just isn't a priority right now. It's just going to have to wait like many other issues until the right time comes.

Joseph M. Gergela, III is Executive Director of the Long Island Farm Bureau.

Aimee Mullins: Redefining Beauty

From Memorial Day through Labor Day, the buzz in the Hamptons revolves around celebrities and famous people. The bigger the name, the louder the buzz. But in reflection of the summer season of 2001, one of the most unique guests we've had is twenty-five year old Aimee Mullins, who is perhaps the most beautiful – inside and out – of all "the beautiful people" to visit the East End.

Aimee Mullins

As we've read about numerous fundraisers held in the months of July and August, you may recall one of them being "The Child Development Center of the Hamptons," a Foundation for Special Children. The Honorary Chair was Governor George E. Pataki and co-chairs were Kimmi Kappenberg and Jeff Varner of CBS' show, Survivor: The Australian Outback. A third co-chair was Aimee Mullins, a paralympic amputee and fashion model.

Aimee was born without fibulas in both calves, leaving her parents with a difficult decision – whether their little girl would spend the rest of her life in a wheelchair – or opt for amputation of both legs, six-inches below the knee. Call it parents' intuition or Aimee's persevering spirit of not wanting to be confined, but the right choice for her was made.

Aimee had the surgery on her first birthday, with subsequent surgeries at ages three, five and eight. She went through extensive physical therapy that confined her to the hospital for up to six months at a time. She did not like being held back, and she showed it.

Aimee not only learned to walk by the age of two (on heavy wooden legs), she eventually also learned how to ski, swim, play softball, long jump and run.

As amazing as that is, Aimee went on to become a world record holder and paralympic athlete.

Describing herself as a daredevil and a tomboy, she recalls the first time she went to the beach. She ran into the surf, only to be wiped-out by the crash of a wave; but being one feisty 7-year-old, she came floating back up, holding one leg under each arm. She attributes a lot of her success to her sense of humor. As a kid, she enjoyed flipping a bolt on her prosthetic feet, and turning them backwards.

Even though she's comfortable with her legs, Aimee has memories of trying to make others comfortable , including a kindergarten teacher who thought of her situation as "improper" and a "distraction" to the other kids. But when telling most people for the first time about her legs, their reaction is usually, 'Oh, really?'

"If they are uncomfortable with someone having prosthetic limbs, then they have a lot more to deal with than li'l old me."

Amiee learned how to turn the negatives of her young life into positives. She grew up in Pennsylvania and Ireland, and attributes her many blessings to her mom, dad, two younger brothers and her many friends. "I was 'one of them.'"

Aimee attended college at Georgetown University in Washington D.C, which she loved, majoring in history and diplomacy. She graduated in 1998. While there she decided, in her junior year, that she wanted to run track. One day, Georgetown track coach Frank Gagliano, who was used to working with well-known Olympians, received a phone call from a young lady he describes as having a real "desire." She introduced herself and requested to run as a double below-the-knee amputee. She wanted to train for the August 1996 Paralympics in Atlanta, Georgia, where she met honorary chairman President Bill Clinton.

Mullins took the words, "On your mark" very seriously and, even competing against able-bodied athletes, soon broke all sorts of records in the bi-lateral below knee 100 meter, 200 meter and long jump (3.5 meters). She was the only amputee to have competed on a Division I track team, and was one of more than 4,000 athletes from 110 countries. She accepted the agonies along the way, saying that she's crashed and burned on the track more times than she cares to count, but running rewards her with the freedom she longed for.

Although Aimee's strong disposition makes her beautiful on the inside, her outside beauty is readily apparent. This fact compelled her to try other ventures in life, such as becoming a fashion model.

"I get bored just doing one thing," she said. "I act, I write, I speak Italian, I serve on a few boards, I create, I am curious about life, and I do a lot of traveling."

This past summer, she was invited to Elton John's private party in Paris.

"What was that like?" I asked. "I'll leave that up to your imagination," she said. "Trust me, whatever you can dream up is probably right on target!"

Aimee is good friends with Heather Mills (Paul McCartney's fiancee). Heather lost a leg in 1993 after she was hit by a motorcar crossing a street in London. Aimee was astounded at the sight of Heather's lifelike prosthesis.

HOW TO FIND A GOOD STYLIST

The day will come when you will have to find a new stylist. It is inevitable as death and about as pleasant. Over the years I have been asked how to find a good stylist or salon and over time I have worked out the following formula with good results:

1. DO NOT use a stylist that friends, relatives or co-workers recommend.

As it turns out they will rarely tell you who their stylist really is because over the course of time they have told the stylist every detail of their personal lives and they don't want them to slip out. The mere mention of who sent you can send a chatterbox stylist on a rampage. They also don't want you to mimic their style. I think asking a total stranger is better. If you see someone on the street who has a cut that you would like; simply stop her and ask. You needn't be embarrassed, it is quite flattering to the person whom you stopped and she will be eager to brag up her salon or stylist.

2. Age, gender, sexual orientation, race and years of experience have nothing to do with the the talent of a stylist.

Don't get caught up in nonsensical stereotypes. They will neither serve you nor become you.

Instead, I recommend screening the salon. Do they have an internship or apprentice program for training their new stylists? How often do they have education in the salon (other than product education). How often do they go to an IBS, (International Beauty Show) in California, Chicago, or New York? How many have been to an advanced academy with Tony and Guy, Paul Mitchell and the like?

3. Last but not least, I always give the straight razor test.

Walk up to a stylist in the salon who isn't doing anything and ask him or her to show you their straight razor. If it isn't in that person's tool belt or a station ready for use, or if it has a guard on it, turn and go! Those people are NOT serious about hair cutting. Imagine a plumber not knowing how to use a wrench!

If the salon is dedicated to being the best, you can bet the stylists are too, and it does not matter a hoot whom you choose in that salon. –Annette G.

Finding The Joy And Magic In Life

Developing the attitude of kindness will help you become more healthy and beautiful. When you think kind thoughts and do kind acts your whole body chemistry changes. You become more in harmony with the rhythms of nature. When you are kind to others it spills over into all creatures that walk our earth. The pebble in the pond effect. You drop a pebble in the pond and the ripples just keep going on and on. Each time you give out kindness and love the effects ripple out to the world and back to you. You will become sensitive to life in any form. As you become more giving and loving you become sweeter to look at and wonderful to behold. Your face softens. You feel so much better. Your feeling changes from one of harshness, punishment and judgment to a softer you where kindness and love resides. There is no light like the one that shines from someone who has cultivated the light of kindness and compassion for all living things. When the feelings change the whole bodymindspirit rhythm changes. Joy is the natural by-product. Joy leads to the expression of the fullness of life. When you feel joy and love present in your life you radiate beauty and health.

Try it right now. Dredge up angry feelings about some past occurrence. Feel how your whole body feels. Tense, rigid, unable to smile except superficially and now change that feeling to one of profound kindness, empathy and understanding toward the situation or person. Feel the change that takes place in yourself. Look in the mirror see how your face changes. If you want to become more beautiful and magnetic to the world become more giving and loving.

In order to be better at something you must practice. *Set out every week to do three kind acts within the week. Do not talk about them. When you begin to tell people of these acts you actually nullify the act itself. As the bible says, when you tell of your kind acts, then you already have your reward. Keep doing kind acts. They do not have to be of spectacular magnitude. It can be the tiniest kind. Just look for opportunities. When you begin this practice you will see great changes in yourself. You will become more and more attractive to the world. You will become more and more loving. Your health will improve. Know in your heart that life is a circle and you will be the recipient of what you give.

When you are an unkind person you get a pinched mouth and a hard look upon your face. Your heart becomes stony and cold. The life force radiating out from you lacks genuine emotions and depth. The sparkle leaves your eyes and they become lifeless. You can have all the plastic surgery you want and still real beauty will evade you. Real beauty begins from within, It's quiet and warm and everlasting like the beauty of a sunset. It shines within you constantly. As it does you emanate light waves of magnetic energy that shine out from you for all who have eyes to see. Age becomes no obstacle to health and beauty as you practice giving love and kindness to all. You enhance the presence of love within you for all to see. With each kind act you demonstrate, you increase your own vibration of love. As you increase your inner energy of love it shines out from you like a beacon of light.

It goes without saying that we must care for our bodies with good nutrition and exercise. It is when we become overly concerned with the trends of the day that we are in danger of forgetting to cultivate the inner us. This is where health and beauty really begin.

Start with being kind to yourself. Praise yourself. Give yourself love first. Lose the judgment we all have about ourselves. Our critical judgments of ourselves are a sure way to unattractiveness and ill health.

*Look in the mirror deep into your eyes and tell yourself over and over again how truly wonderful you are.

*Think of all the wonderful things about you. Write about them in detail.

*Every time you say a critical word about yourself or others fine yourself $5.00 and at the end of the week give it away to a stranger or a church.

*Give out at least five sincere compliments a day to people other than your loved ones.

*Look for nice things to say to people.

Remember for each and every kindness you put out into the world your world will enrich ten times over. You will become more healthy and more beautiful than you could have ever imagined.

POLICE BLOTTER

In Montauk last Friday, police were called to investigate a Bryant Road residence where Patricia Lenz, the house keeper of a rental house, found herself in a hairy situation. She had just cleaned the house and was preparing for new residents when she discovered a foul prank. Police said a pile of what looked like human hair and blood was actually just some rope fragments and red dye.

Out for a night of dancing at the NV Tsunami nightclub in East Hampton two weeks ago, Melanie L. Solomon found $450 snatched from her purse. She reported the incident this week. This incident is only a ripple in the wave of nightclub crimes on the East End.

Also in East Hampton at Turtle Crossing, Arthur Wolf of Shelter Island, the chef and manager of the establishment, arrived to work at around 9 a.m. Sunday to find $900 missing. Police reported that the back door had been pried open before the thief made off with the cash.

A suspect known as "The Fastest Stapler in the East" saw his window of opportunity sometime on September 3. John Flaherty, office manager at Volk's on Springs Fireplace Road in East Hampton arrived to work on the Fourth of this month to find a window open and a staple gun moved from one desk to another. Police reported no damage.

On Ford's Lane in Tuckahoe, police responded to a call from a resident in need of some minor lawn care. The woman reported that someone unknown to her had doused her lawn with some sort of chemical, in turn killing the grass. Police gathered that the turf terrorist attempted to spell something, but they couldn't figure what.

Leslie Wilson, age 40 of Sag Harbor, was arrested last Friday at around 3:45 p.m. after she executed some unwanted home improvement on her Sag Harbor residence. Police released Ms. Wilson on $200 bail after she kicked in a wall in her house.

Michael Messinger of West 24th Street in Manhattan called police last week to a Montauk spa. Mr. Messinger said he was in the "nap" area of the spa when a man approached him and began administering a massage without Michael's consent. Police quoted Mr. Messinger as being "annoyed and alarmed" before they questioned the free-lance masseuse. No charges were pressed and Mr. Messinger was anything but sore about the incident.

You say "potato" I say "potato" and Sharon Gilliam of Sunrise Ave. in Bridgehampton says her sack of spuds was stolen some night last week. Police have no suspects in the case but are keeping an eye on the situation.

Police are still investigating a stolen 1989 Chevy Blazer that was found behind V&V Auto on September 5. When the vehicle was discovered it had apparently been crashed into a cesspool truck behind the auto repair establishment. The owner, Thomas Rothwell of Amagansett, had left his truck at the Amagansett train station with the keys inside. Police are estimating the value of the Blazer at about $1,000 and have no suspects.

The increase in flag thefts is evident on the East End. Last Friday an employee at the Oceanside Beach Resort in Montauk reported to police that his $175 American flag was stolen.

Another unpatriotic crime was committed this week here at Dan's Papers in Bridgehampton. Our one-day-old version of Old Glory was stolen overnight from the Montauk Highway property.

In Sag Harbor last Friday, village police were called to the house of Robert J. Wilson. Wilson's father had called police at around 10 a.m. when Robert took his father's keys, wallet, and car, then spent $20 of his money. Police arrested Robert Wilson, in violation of an order of protection, and charged him with contempt of court, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and petit larceny.

Dan's LETTERS

LAND OF THE FREE

Dear Dan,

I have not had a day pass since Tuesday, September 11, 2001 without shedding many tears for this "Attack on America" to the World Trade Center in New York City. Tears shed by many of my fellow Americans for those hurt, lost and still unfound. Tears shed for ALL the rescue workers lost and unfound and for all those who are still helping throughout this surreal incident.

Today, ALL of us Americans who ARE alive are lucky. Watching the television, listening to the radio and reading the papers has us all sharing in this grief. It is so amazing how everyone is trying so hard to do some little thing to help in whatever way possible.

Why does such evil prevail in some individuals hearts and minds? Why must so much hatred and killing exist? Why is it so difficult for ALL of mankind, all over the entire WORLD to "Give Peace a Chance?"

Life is so precious and some lives are so short. Every day is special. As red, white and blue AMERICANS in this time of great need, we must all UNITE! Fly our American flags, stand behind our American motto "Land of the Free and Home of the Brave" and always remember we will endure.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

Dear Dan,

I read your article about the Brown project. I think that the architectural firm of Reiser & Umemoto are among the "world's greatest architects" involved in this project. Debbie Reiser told me that her son Jesse and his wife Nanako Umemoto were invited to design a house for a project in Sagaponack. I would be interested to know if it is the Baker project. Jesse is Uncle Ed's grandson. The apple doesn't fall far from the tree.

Let me know. The article was very well written.

Love,
Mom

CHECK THOSE FACTS, PLEASE!

Dear Dan,

I would like to comment on an article in the August 10 issue titled "Thunder Bird Sisters Singers."

In regard to the statement made about the Shinnecock Nation losing "another sacred site," I wish to correct Ms. Morpurgo. As the director of sales for Parrish Pond, (perhaps you've seen our ads?), I would like to let her know that the property, on which we have already begun construction, was not land from the reservation, nor was it Indian burial ground. At the time of this being an issue, the developer had dug up a good deal of this land. Over 700 test holes were done during Phase 1 and 11 and were reviewed by New York State Archeological Studies, and there weren't any sensitive archeological findings.

I find offense in the fact that there were assumptions written as factual. Perhaps she should have done some fact-finding prior to writing the article.

EVERONE MAKES MISTEAKS SOMTIMES

Dear Dan,

Enduring your maddening and difficult foibles as a Dan's Papers editor for three years, I was delighted to see the charming correction you ran in the August 17 issue. ("Henry Schleif Didn't Think This Was Funny.") It was an accurate depiction of how some of those crazy misprints get in the paper.

Keep up your zany, wonderful work. You are a frustrating, maddening, wonderful and unique individual.

I am glad to see that you still list our dear, departed friend, Elaine Benson, as your faculty advisor. She also continues to be an advisor to me.

Regards to all still working in the trenches at Dan's Papers.

Irene Keller-Queen
Grand Junction, Co.

NICE WORK, HELGA

Dear Dan,

Thank you so much for coverage of the Shinnecock Indian Nation.

The recent articles Dream Come True (Kirk Cassels), Who's Here, Thunder Bird Sisters (Helga Marpurgo and At Shinnecock (Helga Morpurgo) were excellent.

I encourage you to follow the progress of the Museum Cultural Center, and The Thunder Bird Sisters and the history of the Native Americans and to keep the public informed.

How about a ballot in your paper to clip out and send to congress petitioning them to rename Columbus Day 'Native American Day'. I believe it was done a decade ago in South (not the cold North) Dakota, maybe elsewhere. Maybe one day the history books will be re-written. Dan's Papers has the power to do this!

Thanks again.

Beauty

Six months later, at the age of 21, Amiee flew to England to visit Bob Watts, one of the world's leading designers in silicon cosmetic artificial limbs. The cost ranges from $10,000 a pair to $35,000. This made Aimee remark in her bubbly way, "Yikes! But sadly," she says, "insurance companies are no help to people who really need the help."

Aimee's visit to the UK inspired a lot of attention by the media, including America's NBC NEWS and Sports Illustrated as well as BBC's South Today.

Aimee was thrilled with the life-like silicone skin, which matched her own skin color, and was able to shop in London for things she could never buy before, such as short skirts and even shoes.

About modeling, Aimee said," even though it's meant to be fantasy, a lot of people look to it for reality." She thinks modeling with her prosthetic legs redefines the meaning of beauty, which to her should include a positive self image. Her message to young girls is simple: "Love yourself first. What makes us 'unique' is what makes us beautiful!"
